CARTER LEADS IN HEAVY VOTE, BUT RACE WITH FORD IS CLOSE; DEMOCRATS RETAIN CONGRESS

Moynihan Defeats Buckley for New York Senate Seat

By MAURICE CARROLL

P. Moynihan, who waged a campaign that sought to capitalize on the black community all through the normal Democratic sympathies of New York voters, won election to the State Senate yesterday.

Moynihan, former representative of the 11th Assembly District in Spring Garden, Queens, a black area, for instance, Mr. Carter trounced President Ford by 9 to 1, while Mr. Moynihan's margin over Mr. Buckley was only 4 to 1.

But a Jewish district in Forest Hills supported Mr. Moynihan, 4 to 1, and Mr. Carter only 2 to 1. The Irish in the Ninth Election District of the 30th Assembly District in Woodside, Queens, voted 2 to 1, Carter over Ford, and 3 to 1, Moynihan over Buckley.

In Co-op City in the Bronx, in a heavily Jewish district, it was Mr. Carter by 6 to 1, but Mr. Moynihan by 10 to 1. In Bay Ridge in Brooklyn, Mr. Ford doubled

Wisconsin Voters Re-elect Williams

By JOSEPH F. SULLIVAN

Harrison A. Williams Jr. easily won his fourth term in New York yesterday, but Representative Joseph P. Moynihan, the Democratic incumbent, is scheduled to go on trial soon for extortion charges, was denied his bid for a seventh term.

Williams, a Democrat, ran well in the state in trouncing David Ross, his Republican challenger. 2,662 of 5,569 districts reporting, for Senator was:

Dem	806,962
Rep	526,943

His victory was assured, Mr. Williams, with his wife, Jeanette, standing by, told his campaign workers yesterday in Elizabeth: "You are responsible for our principles, for what we have done and for what we will do."

Weicker Wins a 2d Term Easily

By MICHAEL KNIGHT
Special to The New York Times

FORD, Nov. 2—United States Lowell P. Weicker Jr. scored an easy re-election victory today over Schaffer, the state's top Democratic-getter and the only woman for the Senate this year.

161 of the state's 169 towns and reporting, the unofficial vote was:

Rep	477,501

In an intensive effort, Mrs. Schaffer is Connecticut's Secretary of State, was unable to generate much excitement during the campaign or close between herself and Senator Weicker, the maverick first-term Republican, earned a nationwide reputation as a member of the Senate Education Committee.

In the Congressional races, all of the state's four Democratic and two Republican candidates in marked contrast to the vote in the Presidential contest in Connecticut, where President Ford and Jimmy Carter were separated by only a few thousand votes.

The clear-cut result in the senatorial race was in marked contrast to the voting in the Presidential contest in this state, where President Ford defeated Jimmy Carter by only a few percentage points.

Despite her defeat statewide, Mrs. Schaffer won handsily, and sometimes even overwhelmingly, in many of the state's many ethnic neighborhoods. She carried the black districts of normally Republican Stamford, for example, the Italian and Polish areas of industrial New Britain and the Italian, Irish and black districts of Hartford.

In the Congressional races, all of the state's four Democratic and two Republican candidates in marked contrast to the vote in the Presidential contest in Connecticut, where President Ford and Jimmy Carter were separated by only a few thousand votes.

KEY STATES IN DOUBT

Georgian Carries South and Border Areas in Standing Off Drive by President

By R. W. APPLE JR.

With the issue still in doubt, Jimmy Carter held a narrow but relatively steady lead over President Ford last night in the nation's Bicentennial presidential election, apparently aided by a heavier turnout than had been expected.

The outcome nationwide hung on the ultimate results in several of the big industrial states, including Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Illinois. But Mr. Carter appeared to have better than an even chance of carrying at least two of them, which would give him an electoral-vote majority barring upsets elsewhere.

In the metropolitan area, the Georgian lost both Connecticut and New Jersey, but New York, a must for him, was leaning toward Mr. Carter.

Carter Strong in South

Mr. Ford was unable to put a significant dent in his Democratic rival's Southern and Border States base. Mr. Carter took all the Border States except Oklahoma, where the contest was close, and swept the South, with the exception of Mississippi and Virginia, which remained in considerable doubt.

Picture in Pivotal States

This was the situation in the seemingly pivotal states:

Carter	18,945,285—51%
Ford	17,824,284—48%

With 44 percent of the nation's precincts reporting, the vote was:

Five Senators Lose Seats, but Shift In Party Line-Ups Appears Slight

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM

At least five incumbent senators were defeated yesterday, but the Democrats retained a clear majority in the new Senate.

The results of the races for the 435 seats in the House of Representatives came in more slowly last night, but there was no evidence of a substantial shift in the Democrats' current 2-to-1 majority in the House.

The Senators defeated in the states that reported early were Vance Hartke of Indiana and Joseph M. Montoya of New Mexico, who are Democrats; James L. Buckley of New York, Conservative Republican, and Bill Brock of Tennessee and J. Glenn Beall Jr. of Maryland, Republicans.

Meanwhile, initial results from the races for governor in 14 states showed that the Republicans won governorships from Democrats in Illinois and Delaware while the Democrats regained executive mansions in West Virginia and North Carolina. [Page 22]

Mr. Hartke, chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee and a ranking member of the Finance and Commerce Committees, was defeated by Richard G. Lugar, the former Republican Mayor of Indianapolis. Mr. Hartke was trying for his fourth term in the Senate.

Mr. Montoya, running for a third term, was defeated by a former astronaut, Harrison H. Schmitt, a Republican. Mr. Montoya was a member of the Senate Watergate committee and is chairman of an appropriations subcommittee.

Senators Buckley, Brock and Beall served one term each in the Senate.

Mr. Buckley was defeated by Daniel P. Moynihan, a Democrat, who was United States representative to the United Nations.

ATLANTIC CITY SEES GAMBLING APPROVAL

Throngs Dance in Resort Streets as Casinos Apparently Win

By MARTIN WALDRON

New Jersey voters yesterday apparently approved Las Vegas-style gambling casinos in Atlantic City, the first on the East Coast, and residents of Atlantic City began a wild celebration.

With 1,549 districts of 5,569 reporting, the casino gambling vote was:

Yes	418,406
No	319,211

Promoters of casinos, including Atlantic City's legislative delegation, scheduled a meeting for 9 A.M. today to begin drafting a law to implement the constitutional amendment voted on yesterday.

Huge crowds shouting hallelujah thronged downtown streets and Atlantic City's famed boardwalk, and bars began handing out free drinks.

Officials of the New Jersey Council of Churches had organized a $20,000 campaign against the proposal.

Two years ago, New Jersey voters defeated by more than 400,000 votes an amendment to the State Constitution that would have allowed casinos anywhere in the state.

The Council of Churches and United States Attorney Jonathan L. Goldstein, who was the most vocal opponent of casinos, had predicted that if Atlantic City got casinos, other areas of the state would demand them also.

Mr. Goldstein also warned that gambling would bring crime to Atlantic City.

Pro-Statehood Candidate Takes Lead in Puerto Rico

By DAVID VIDAL
Special to The New York Times

SAN JUAN, P.R., Nov. 2—In what appeared to be developing into a stunning upset, San Juan Mayor Carlos Romero Barcelo of the pro-statehood New Progressive Party took an early and significant lead for the governorship of Puerto Rico over the incumbent, Rafael Hernandez Colon, of the Popular Democratic Party.

A clear trend of erosion in the traditional rural power base of the Popular Democrats emerged early in the evening and projections by local television stations on the basis of partial data gave Mr. Romero Barcelo victory by a margin of two percentage points.

With large new Progressive Party strongholds such as San Juan remaining to be counted, it appeared unlikely the incumbent administration, which favors continuation of the island's commonwealth status, could gather enough strength to make up for unexpected losses.

A measure of the trend was seen in Barranquitas, considered a stronghold of the Popular Democrats because it was the birthplace of the father of Luis Munoz Marin, founder of the Popular Democratic Party and of the Commonwealth. The 78-year-old leader came out of political seclusion to campaign there personally over the weekend. The party was losing there, however, as it was in Mayaguez, called the capital of the Popular Democrats.

In 1972, when 84.14 percent of the electorate voted, the Popular Democratic Party won by 85,631 votes, taking 51.2 percent as against 44.01 percent for the New Progressives. Other parties divided the rest.

Although each major party had pre-election polls indicating it would win this year, other polls had shown a high number of undecided voters.

That there was any doubt at all of a Popular Democratic victory was significant and indicated the changing nature of the electorate, of its perception of the party and of the party itself.

For years, islanders had grown accustomed to more and more prosperity under the "bread, land, and liberty" slogan of the Popular Democrats of Luis Munoz Marin, who led the party to four consecutive governorships.

The power base of the party was in rural areas, and even in 1972 it won in 73 municipalities to 5 for the New Progressives, largely in urban areas.

Although it was a social justice legacy that brought the Popular Democrats to power in urban areas, it was notable that the flag of the New Progressive Party was highly visible in the slums.

Mr. Munoz Marin, 78 years old, did some campaigning for his party this year against the advice of his doctors. But

Saudi Arabia Commissions Iceberg Study

Special to The New York Times
PARIS, Nov. 2—Saudi Arabia confirmed today that it had commissioned a study on the feasibility of towing icebergs from the Antarctic to the arid desert kingdom where the ice would melt into water for drinking and irrigation.

The project, being undertaken by a reputable French engineering concern, is "under active study," said Saudi Arabia's top irrigation expert, Prince Mohammed Faisal, in a cable received here today. The Prince, a nephew of King Khalid, is chairman of the Saudi Saline Water Conversion Corporation.

The French engineers at the Cicero Company, which is preparing the study, hope that it will lead to a contract to begin the actual work by the end of the year.

According to François de Broglie, a Cicero spokesman, tentative plans call for hauling a first, 85-million-ton iceberg over a distance of 5,000 miles through the Indian Ocean and Red Sea at a cost of $90 million.

A Speed of a Knot an Hour

The spokesman said the iceberg would be hauled by a half dozen of the most powerful tugboats in existence, such as those used in towing oil-drilling platforms. He said cruising speed would be one knot and that the journey could take six months to a year.

Mr. de Broglie said the slow speed would minimize friction. Beyond that, he said the iceberg would be protected against water, waves, current and the sun by 18-inch-thick plastic wrappings. Even so, he said the iceberg would lose "close to 20 percent" of its mass before arrival off Jidda, a Saudi port.

Cicero has calculated that the price in Saudi Arabia of drinkable water from the iceberg would work out to 30 cents for one cubic meter, half the price of drinking water obtained through desalting seawater.

Before the iceberg could get to Saudi Arabia, however, a tricky problem must be solved. The kind of iceberg needed for the maiden voyage would extend about 250 yards under water. But the Bab el Mandeb Strait at the entrance of the Red Sea is less than 40 yards deep.

Could Cut Into Slices

Paul-Emile Victor, a prominent French polar explorer who is associated with Cicero in the project, has proposed that the iceberg be cut into 1-million-ton slices, like a cake, before it reaches Bab el Mandeb. The slicing would be done by thermal drilling, using electrically heated wires lowered into the iceberg.

The sections would slide into the water one by one and then could be towed much faster to their destination near Jidda.

The ice would be kept there for melting, which would take up to 18 months. On top of each little iceberg, lakes would form from melted ice. This would be pumped ashore into reservoirs through a floating pipeline.

The project raises many problems in all sorts of areas and techniques. The right iceberg has to be chosen, of the right size, and rectangular so that it would not tip as it is towed. The spotting would be done by satellite. Then the solidity of the iceberg must be tested—no cracks, no crevasses. This would be done by sonar instruments carried by a helicopter.

The plastic wrapping would have to be fixed atop the iceberg, and towed underneath and around it. Ocean depths and currents must be considered. A tentative course goes northwest, then northeast in a long loop into the southern Indian Ocean, then northwestward and up to the Gulf of Aden.

Several schemes for towing icebergs to warm climates have been discussed in recent years. One of the most recent has been assessed in a study conducted by the Rand Corporation of Santa Monica, Calif., for the National Science Foundation.

It grew out of a proposal by Dr. John Isaacs of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla, Calif., whereby water derived from Antarctic icebergs would relieve shortages in southern California.

As reported in 1973, a train of eight icebergs, stretching for perhaps 20 miles, could be towed at one knot with no more power than that used to propel an aircraft carrier. It was calculated that a substantial part of the ice would remain despite the need to cross the tropics.

Chiang Ching and 3 Others Accused of Disrupting Economic Progress

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Nov. 2—The new authorities in China have charged Mao Tse-tung's widow, Chiang Ching, and the three other senior leftists who have been the targets of denunciation, with disrupting industrial production and interfering with the management of the economy.

A front-page article yesterday in the party newspaper, Jenmin Jih Pao, asserted that the leftists had "carried out criminal activities to energetically disrupt socialist production." In a reference to the antirightist campaign this year, it added that they had branded as rightists those who advocated increasing production.

Because of the criticism of those who favored increased production and because of heightened political factionalism, industrial output is believed to have declined this year from an average annual growth rate of almost 10 percent over the last 15 years. Chinese statistics for the first six months of 1976 showed an increase of 7 percent; a broadcast yesterday from Kwangtung Province said its factories had achieved a 4.4 percent rise through September.

Jenmin Jih Pao called on Chinese workers to "make up for the loss in production inflicted by the gang of four," as the leftists have been called since they were arrested and disgraced last month.

Stress on Growth Discerned
The allegation about the leftists' adverse influence on production is another in a series of indications that the new Chinese leaders intend to return to a more pragmatic policy, stressing economic growth. They have already said they would reinstate the late Prime Minister Chou En-lai's ambitious program to modernize China by the year 2000 and hinted that they might adopt a less restrictive policy toward art and literature.

fang Chun Pao, proclaimed a more conservative attitude toward leadership, saying that China should be governed by "the most authoritative, influential and experienced" officials. Mao's policy in recent years had stressed more rapid promotion for younger party workers.

The Jenmin Jih Pao article said that the four leftists had "reeled off the following nonsense: 'When the revolution is well led, production automatically increases.'" The newspaper's allegation could be interpreted as undermining one of Mao's cherished notions—that the economy would advance most quickly only if the leaders preserved revolutionary values.

Ranking officials have also told foreign visitors that Miss Chiang and the others had constantly interfered in economic decisions, disrupting party meetings to interject ideas considered poorly based. The officials have maintained that the four leftists had no real understanding of economics.

Little Sign of Opposition
So far Hua Kuo-feng, the new Chairman of the Communist Party, and his allies among the senior party officials and army commanders have moved with surprising speed and have apparently encountered little opposition. There are indications, nevertheless, that they do not plan to push too far too fast. Chinese officials have told Western diplomats in Peking over the last few days not to expect a full session of the party Central Committee in the near future. Such a session might give formal approval to a major realignment of party and government posts.

Moreover, Mr. Hua and his associates seem to have issued a directive to the provinces not to turn the attacks on the four leftists into a full-scale purge. In a broadcast yesterday the Shansi provincial radio said: "We must trust the great majority of the cadres and masses. We must allow comrades who have made mistakes to correct their mistakes. It is all right when they have corrected their mistakes."

The broadcast was echoed by the Kiangsi radio, which said: "As to those who have made mistakes, it is necessary to differentiate between cases and treat them accordingly. The great majority of them were only influenced by the gang of four, made wrong statements and did wrong things." The broadcast, indicating that such officials did not actually join the four culprits, added: "Do not keep on attacking their past mistakes. Do not squabble endlessly over past grudges."

Syria Is Said to Send More Troops To Lebanon for Arab Peace Force

By IHSAN A. HAJAZI
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Nov. 2—Syria has reportedly sent 3,000 additional troops into Lebanon.

Travelers from the Bekaa Valley, in the east of the country near the Syrian frontier, reported that soldiers crossed and armored cars already painted in the colors of the Arab peacekeeping force agreed upon to restore order in the country.

Reports in the Beirut press today said that some thousands of Saudi and Sudanese troops had arrived in Syria on their way here.

Other contingents from Yemen and Southern Yemen and Libya will be sent here eventually to be part of the Arab force decided upon by two Arab leaders' conferences held last month to try to bring peace to Lebanon. Arab heads of state recommended a force of 30,000 men.

Dr. Hassan Sabry el-Kholy, the Arab League's special representative, said at a news conference yesterday that Arab troops would arrive in 48 hours.

Effort to Stabilize Truce

Dr. Kholy called today on President Elias Sarkis and handed him a detailed plan for the stationing of Arab forces along the front lines in various parts of the country and for stabilizing the 11-day-old cease-fire.

Beirut was relatively calm today after a night of heavy fighting during which shells fell on residential areas. Incendiary shells burned out the sixth floor of the Moslem Barbi Hospital, situated on the line separating the capital's Christians and Moslem districts.

According to a rightist radio station, artillery duels were under way in the afternoon in most of Lebanon between the Moslem port of Tripoli and the Christian town of Zghorta in the hills to the east.

The plan submitted by Dr. Kholy was reached at two days of meetings between Maj. Gen. Mohammed Hassan Ghoneim, the Egyptian commander of the first elements of an Arab peacekeeping force, sent here four months ago, and military aides of the Lebanese President.

Accord a Positive Step

The reported agreement by the rightist Christians to allow the Arab peacekeeping force to establish observation posts in Christian-held territory was regarded as a positive step.

The agreement followed mediation by King Hussein of Jordan, who yesterday sent former Prime Minister Zaid al-Rifai here to meet with Christian leaders. After the meetings, Camille Chamoun, one of the foremost Christian leaders, said that the rightists had decided to cooperate in carrying out the Arab peace plan.

Mr. Chamoun, who is a close friend of the Jordanian monarch, said earlier that the Arab troops would not be admitted into Christian districts.

King Hussein's good offices were used after Syrian pressure on the rightists had failed to produce the desired results. There were reports that the Syrians were prepared to force their way into Christian territory if the Christians continued to reject basing of the Arab force, in which Syrians are to form the major part.

Jamaican Opposition Leader and Ex-Premier Are Shot at From Office of Ruling Party but Are Uninjured

PORT KAITUMA, Jamaica, Nov. 2 (Reuters) — Jamaican opposition leader, Edward Seaga, and former Prime Minister Hugh Shearer were unharmed when a motorcade passed a local town last night, the police said.

Mr. Seaga nor Mr. Shearer was injured, six people were injured, six seriously, police said.

On supporters in the motorcade the gunmen and then burned the National Party office in York town, Clarendon, about 45 miles from Kingston, the police said.

With general elections expected to be announced for Dec. 21, tension has been mounting at political meetings held by the island's two major parties.

There have been a number of skirmishes between supporters of Mr. Seaga's Jamaica Labor Party and the People's National Party.

But this was by far the most serious incident. Sources close to the Jamaica Labor Party said Mr. Seaga was thrown into a state of shock by the shooting and was under mild sedation today.

The police said that as the head of the 20-car motorcade reached the party office gunman opened fire on the cars in which Mr. Seaga and Mr. Shearer were travelling.

Their supporters surrounded them to give them protection before chasing the gunmen and burning down the office, they added.

"I am not fearful of anything," said Edward Seaga last summer.

The opposition leader's statement was based on more than bravado. Well-armed partisans of both his Jamaica Labor Party and the ruling People's National Party were gunning each other down in the Kingston slums but Mr. Seaga himself—like Prime Minister Michael Manley—was considered safe from assault or assassination.

Any attempt to arrest or kill him, Mr. Seaga said in an interview, "would be a desperate measure" that he indicated could send the tense Caribbean island of two million people into a civil war that not even fanatics on both sides were ready for.

But now that assumption has been shattered by the shotgun blast fired yesterday at the 46-year-old opposition leader and Hugh Shearer, a 54-year-old former Labor Prime Minister, as they campaigned.

The consequences are not yet clear. But the attack seems likely to set political passions aflame again despite stringent government emergency rule imposed last June to crack down on the violence and, perhaps, the opposition.

The effects of the attack could also ripple beyond Jamaica to its Caribbean island neighbors—particularly Cuba.

Mr. Manley's mildly Socialist Government has been developing closer ties with its Communist neighbor 90 miles to the north. The development has been bitterly opposed by Mr. Seaga's party, supported largely by the island's business establishment, oligarchic wealth and the middle class.

No one can predict what Cuba's reaction might be if the Manley Government, one of its few friends in the Caribbean, seems threatened by violent overthrow. Nor what the American reaction would be to a Cuban involvement.

Albanian Leader Says He Foiled Military Coup a Few Years Ago

VIENNA, Nov. 2 (Reuters)—The leader of Albania's Communist Party, Enver Hoxha, has told a party congress that he foiled plans for a military coup d'état against him several years ago.

According to a broadcast from Tirana, the Albanian capital, he made the statement yesterday during the first part of a keynote speech at the seventh congress of the ruling Labor Party. But his remark was not reported by the official press agency, A.T.A.

The broadcast quoted Mr. Hoxha as having said that a faction headed by Defense Minister Beqir Balluku had plotted to seize power with foreign assistance. "This was a very great and dangerous plot," Mr. Hoxha said. He listed the former Defense Minister and seven other officials as traitors. All have been dropped from power over the last three years without explanation.

Isolationist Attitude Is Defended
Today the 69-year-old Albanian leader began the second half of his report with a denunciation of the Soviet Union and the United States, and a defense of Albania's isolationist stance.

As reported by the official press agency, he pledged continued friendship with China, but he appeared to criticize Peking for forging links with Washington. He said all revolutionary forces should approach the two superpowers from a correct class position.

"In the world today the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, are the greatest and most dangerous aggressive imperialist powers that history has ever known," Mr. Hoxha said. "The superpowers, acting alone or together, represent to the same extent and the same degree the principal enemy for socialism, for the liberty and independence of nations."

China has been seeking rapprochement with Washington on the ground that the United States is becoming weaker and the Soviet Union is the more dangerous enemy.

Mr. Hoxha also denounced the North Atlantic alliance, the Common Market and the integration of Western Europe—all of which have been described by China as counterweights to Moscow.

Chinese Alliance Losing Warmth
"One can never rely on one imperialism to fight or escape from the other," Mr. Hoxha continued, repeating a warning he delivered five years ago when the first strains between Tirana and Peking became apparent. Some Western analysts say Mr. Hoxha's rigid Stalinist line may be coming under attack from his colleagues as Albania's alliance with China loses its warmth.

Mr. Hoxha warned Moscow and Washington not to think they would be able to make "an easy mouthful" of Albania in the event of a war.

"Watch out, gentlemen, Socialist Albania is a tough bone that will stick in your throat and choke you," he said.

He said Albania was isolated only to those who looked through capitalist and revisionist eyes. He said Albania had no intention of letting in "Fascists, spies, agents and people who want to fraudulently bring in bourgeois and revisionist degeneration." Despite a "ferocious blockade" by the Kremlin, Albania would be able to survive for 1,000 years without trading with the Russians, he said.

25% of Tourists Planning Trips To South Africa Cancel Visits

JOHANNESBURG, Nov. 2 (Reuters)—About 25 per cent of foreign tourists planning to visit South Africa have cancelled their trips since rioting broke out in June, it was announced here.

R. H. Goldenbuys, president and national chairman of the Association of South African Travel Agents, told a meeting of the association that "a bad overseas press" was the biggest problem facing the South African tourist industry.

Another association official, M. E. Gennrich, said: "Many potential tourists gain the impression that the whole of South Africa is on fire and that one would have to have suicidal thoughts to visit this country."

He said that there was no way of telling how many other foreigners would have decided to come here had the riots not broken out. But he said he thought many would renew their bookings once the unrest ended.

Venezuela Accuses Cuban Exile And 3 in Air Crash Fatal to 73

CARACAS, Venezuela, Nov. 2 (AP)—Dr. Orlando Bosch, a militant anti-Castro Cuban exile, and three Venezuelans were charged today with murder in connection with the Oct. 6 crash of a Cuban jetliner that killed all 73 persons aboard.

The pilot of the DC-8 radiated there was an explosion aboard the craft just before it plunged into the Caribbean about four miles off Barbados.

Judge Delia Estaba Moreno said the indictment named Dr. Bosch; Luis Posada, a Cuban-born Venezuelan citizen and private detective; and two Venezuelan photographers, Freddy Lugo and Hernan Ricardo Lopez.

Judge Estaba Moreno said the indictment accused the four, who are in jail here, of "homicide and manufacture and use of war weapons."

Kohout Appeals to West for Aid

VIENNA, Nov. 2 (AP)—The Czechoslovak playwright Pavel Kohout said today that the authorities in Prague had denied him permission to go to the United States for the Broadway opening of his play "Poor Murderer." The play opened Oct. 20. In an interview in Prague with the Austrian radio, he said he was turning to the Western media for help because he had exhausted the possibilities at home.

"Most camera stores wouldn't touch a 4 foot lens with a 10 foot pole"

Mario Hirsch

I carry things other guys wouldn't dream of carrying. In fact I've got equipment sitting in the back room that the only thing I've ever collected for them was dust. But I'm not crying. That's the way I run my business. When somebody walks into my store I don't want them to walk out with something they had to settle for. That's why my stock room is six times larger than my selling area. In fact, when we expanded our store recently, we knocked walls down so we could build up our inventory even more. What do you want? Cameras? Nobody offers you a bigger selection.

I carry all the big names. Like Minoltas, for example. I've got them covered from top to bottom. And because I buy in big numbers you're able to save in big numbers. It's all part of the Hirsch success formula. Keep the back room jammed with inventory and you'll find the front room stocked with people.

Officials Say Helms Leave Teheran Post

NGTON, Nov. 2 (AP)—Richard Helms, former Director of Central Intelligence, decided to retire as Ambassador in Teheran, United States officials said.

Helms, who is 64 years old, was the Teheran post in 1973. He was named to the post by President Ford of his intention to leave several days ago, the sources said. Mr. Ford decided to delay an announcement until after the voting on Helms' appointment for the end of the year.

Helms was director of the C.I.A. from 1973 to 1976, a period of some of the agency's most controversial activities.

Helms has been charged that he supervised activities that included torture and assassination in Vietnam, direct interference in the domestic activities of such countries as Chile and the training of secret agents for other nations, including Iran. Helms was also charged with the Watergate scandal.

Links Iraqi Closing Order to a 'Clash'

GENEVA, Nov. 2 (Reuters)—Syria's order to close the border between the two countries for several hours suggested that a clash between the Iraqi Army had been responsible for the incident.

The official Syrian press agency, re-opening of the border to permit travel from Iraq as there had been unusual military movements on the road west of Baghdad, likely that a clash has taken place between units of the Iraqi Army along the borders with Syria, it said.

The Syrian announcement earlier in the day that the Iraqi authorities had closed the border and had increased military patrols in Iraq.

Iranian Diplomat Wounded in Paris

PARIS, Nov. 2 (AP)—An Iranian diplomat, Keykavoussi, was critically wounded today by a man on a motorcycle who fired several bullets at him. The police reported that the attack occurred at 7 P.M. at the home of Mr. Keykavoussi, an Iranian consul, in the residential district of northern Paris.

The French news agency Agence France Presse received a telephone call from a 46-year-old diplomat who had been shot by an Iranian leftist terrorist on because he was a secret agent of the Teheran Government to persecute progressive Iranian.

The caller said the slaying was ordered by the Reza Rezaei, named for a leftist commando unit that was active in 1973. It was the sixth terrorist assault on a diplomat in France in two years. A Yugoslav military attaché, Ramon, was killed in Paris on Dec. 19, 1975. Yugoslav vice consul, Mladen, was seriously wounded in March 29, 1975. Spain's deputy attaché, Capt. Bartolome Garcia, was badly wounded by a terrorist on Oct. 8, 1975. Ambassador Erez of Turkey was killed in Oct. 24, 1975. The Bolivian Ambassador, Joaquim Zenteno Anaya, was killed on May 11 this year.

The police established that the Spanish Bolivian had been attacked with a rifle. None of the attackers were arrested or identified.

Jitrarightist Unhurt in Bomb That Injures 6

PARIS, Nov. 2 (AP)—A bomb wrecked 12 cars this morning in the building of the ultrarightist political leader, Le Pen, lives.

Pen and his family were not hurt. Two adults and four children said the bomb attack was the first aimed at him but "the only one really to kill." The police estimated the bomb was made of at least 10 pounds of dynamite.

Pen's National Front held its annual congress last weekend. The theme was "the lack of security and the fight for France."

Pen's chief told today that the party had been the target of two bomb attacks in the week. "One will soon have to be taken when one leaves one's car," he said.

Ethiopia Kills 23 Marxists in Slayings

ADDIS ABABA, Nov. 2 (Reuters)—Ethiopia has killed 23 members of the Marxist-Leninist Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party, "other dissidents," the Addis Ababa radio said today.

The 23 were found guilty of murdering teachers, students and others, it said in a broadcast monitored by the United Nations.

The slayings followed trial by court-martial of the verdicts approved by the state, Brig. Gen. Teferi Bante, who named one of the victims as a member of the Provisional Revolutionary Council.

The government has accused the party of Ethiopia's two-year-old revolution of persuading farmers to destroy their own machinery and factories, the party was accused of strikes, sabotaging factory machinery, and campaigning for the reinstitution of former labor leaders and workers from taking part in recent celebrations.

Did you ever hear a necktie talking? Listen here.

"I'm really old. But I'm very new. I'm an Indian weave, and I come from Peru."

Strange thing for a necktie to say" you say. But this necktie has a strange history.

It all began back in Baltimore, when Mrs. Schreter said to Mr. Schreter, "A. Harvey, you work too hard. We should go on a vacation."

So Mr. and Mrs. S. flew off on an archaeological expedition to Peru. In Lima they met the pastor of a church. And the pastor introduced them to a parishioner whose hobby was hand-weaving.

"Ah," you say.
"The plot thickens."

Right you are, because you see, A. Harvey Schreter is president of the company that owns Cappuccino® Neckties. And his trip turned out to be a bus-man's holiday.

It wasn't long till floor-loom patterns were installed in the Peruvian weaver's home-workshop and native craftspeople from the high Andes Mountains were weaving up a storm of these handsome, intricate patterns.

Each necktie is pure wool, and each has a fascinating story to tell. Some are about primitive animals. (Did you ever see a llama laughing?) And some are striped motifs dating back as far as 4,000 B.C. But most are from the era of "high culture," 1,000 B.C. to the 16th century.

"That's old, all right," you agree.
"Now tell me what's new?"

The very idea of wearing such rich, rare patterns around your neck, for one thing. They'll look especially smart with your tweed suit.

These earthy colors, for another: gray, rust, tile-red and deep blue combinations. They're cut in the contemporary four-inch width for new, shorter point collars.

The price? 12.50, which is thrifty for a tie that's practically an artifact. The place? In the New York area, only at Altman's Men's Store. Or, you can zip down to Peru and look up that pastor.

Austrians May Buy Jet Fighter And Transports From Israel

The Kfir C-2, a jet fighter developed by Israel Aircraft Industries

VIENNA, Nov. 2—Austria is considering buying jet fighters and transport planes from Israel.

Negotiations regarding the proposed deal have brought a warning from the Soviet Union's military newspaper, Krasnaya Zvezda, which said in an editorial last week that Austria would endanger its neutrality if it purchased military aircraft from Israel. Arab countries are understood to have cautioned Vienna that relations might be unfavorably affected by purchase of Israeli planes.

An Israeli source here said that Austrian authorities had indicated "great interest" in the jet fighter, the Kfir C-2, developed for the Israeli Air Force by Israel Aircraft Industries.

The Kfir is powered by engines built in Israel under license from the General Electric Company in the United States. Austria's National Defense Council is

The Kfir is competing here with French Mirage and planes from Sweden's Saab and the United States Throp Corporation. So far, most planes of Austria's small air force supplied by Saab.

The Kfir is reported to be considerably cheaper—costing Austria $5 million—than the competing models. Test pilots and military experts here were said to have reported the Kfir's performance was superior to comparable aircraft available from manufacturers.

Officials here say Israel offered Austrian pilots. Israel also declared ready to take a large part of the in Austrian products such as steel than cash and to deliver a large of spare parts along with the plan ince Military Assistance to South Africa as Aid to Its 'Criminal Policies'

By PETER GROSE
Special to The New York Times
UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Nov. 2—An effort to capitalize on Israel's links with South Africa reached the 31st General Assembly today, in one of a series of resolutions condemning the apartheid system.
The proposed resolution cited up to 24 foreign-made aircraft to be used for providing military assistance to the United States, as well as Israel, Sweden's Saab and the French Mirage and the Swedish C-130 Hercules transport planes.
The Kfir is a fighter developed by Israel. It is being supplied to the Israeli Air Force by engines built from the United States. Defense Council is as the Israeli delegate, Chaim Herzog delivered the most outspoken criticism of the attempt to broaden the debate into an anti-Israeli-Western campaign. The Soviet and leading Arab countries, he said, are far more involved in trade with South Africa than Israel; he cited Iraq, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia specifically for their economic ties to South Africa.

Soviet and Arabs Accused
out of Mr. Herzog's statement—rately so, according to Israeli diplomats—references to the South African aid to many African countries, including some of those in the forefront of a campaign to condemn apartheid and illegal Western collaboration in that field.
well diplomats explained this omission noting that virtually none of the speakers in the apartheid debate singled out Israel for condemnation; criticism had come only from Communist bloc and Arab spokesmen.
South African Prime Minister, John Vorster, the commercial, diplomatic and supply links between the two countries increased dramatically. In the field, Israel is supplying South Africa with a wide range of Israeli-made hardware, including long range missile boats, sophisticated electronic equipment and small arms.
tal attacks on Israel have made headway so far in this General Assembly in contrast with previous years condemnations of Zionism and policies were almost routine. This was not so much a softening of the majority's hostility to Israel as a "whispering preoccupation" this year with the confrontation in southern Africa.
strategy of linking Israel with Africa, therefore, seems to be an attempt by the Arab states to score anti-apartheid points on the capitals of the more anti-apartheid sentiments.
problem of Japan, the United States and West European countries is more acute. The Japanese delegate, Isao Yamamoto, denied that his country's relations with South Africa in any "collaboration" with the apartheid government.
ing on the resolutions could begin as early as tomorrow. Besides the common of Israel's links and the Western trade with South Africa, the call for a ban on athletic contacts with South Africans and demand the release of political prisoners.

South Africa Tells Clash by Blacks Resisting Boycott

JOHANNESBURG, Nov. 2 (AP)—The use of tear gas today in a nearby town to put down fighting between militants and black workers who are resisting the militant's demand for long work stoppage, authorities said.
Gen. David Kriel, the national commander of the riot-control police, said in the crowd in Kagiso township, Krugersdorp, west of here, had that young people were trying to prevent them from going to work.
police said that buses and other vehicles that the blacks use to get to work had to make their way through a hail of stone-throwing. At least one person was reported hospitalized after a car's windshield shattered.
Gen. Kriel said the tear-gas shells were used after the crowd of about 350 people refused to disperse.
Soweto Students' Representative Council is urging black workers to stay at work to demonstrate their sympathy with whites arrested, injured or killed in months of racial unrest. However, reports in Johannesburg reported that the situation today was almost normal.
end of final examinations at black schools appeared to be more successful. In the township of Soweto, outside Johannesburg, hundreds of pupils boycotted tests. Some schools reported no students.
Security Police Chief, Gen. Mike Botha, said today that 16 teachers at Morris Isaacson High School in Johannesburg were detained in a police raid Oct. 29. He said that he also reported that all the students arrested at the school were still being held.
Gen. Botha believed that about 60 Morris Isaacson students have been detained. No charges were given for the arrests but police have indicated that they were a precautionary measure to prevent trouble.

Slovenes in Austria Oppose Cen

By PAUL HOFMANN
Special to The New York Times

KLAGENFURT, Austria—Many ethnic Slovenes here say that they will answer "Chinese" or "Hebrew" when asked during a census scheduled for Nov. 14 what language they as Austrians habitually use.

Many German-speaking foes of the census in Austria have said they will report that they speak Slovenian.

The purpose of the census, according to the Government, is to show how many of the 7.5 million Austrians speak languages other than German so as to fix legal requirements for bilingual road signs and other facilities. The controversial count is aimed at Carinthia, the southernmost province, whose capital is Klagenfurt.

Because of the Slovenian minority in Carinthia, bilingual road signs were put up in 1972, but most of them were torn down by German-speaking nationalists.

Defense of German Carinthia
Now nationalist posters call for a huge turnout in the census to "defend German Carinthia."

Slovenes are calling for a boycott of the census or for reporting some outlandish language. They view the count as an attempt to discriminate against them, as they say is already being done in schools, housing, jobs and life in general.

Militant Slovenes say they are tired of being treated as second-class citizens.

Yugoslavia, with a Slovenian Rep. its own, has declared its support. Austrian Slovenes, and the strained relations between Belgrade and Vienna.

German-speaking nationalists in Yugoslavia has designs to annex southern, Slovene-inhabited part of this.

Leaders Fear Count May Be Punished
Franz Zwitter, chairman of the Carinthia's Slovene Organ said his followers would "see to the results of the census won't be because they might be twisted that many ethnic Slovenes really speak German."

As the census approaches, leaders fear that the count may be punished that respect for minority not weakness, but a sign of strength.

Prime Minister Bruno Kreisky Carinthians that Austria had no al obligations to protect minority. He was alluding to the 1955 treaty that ended the postwar occupation specified that Austria must treat minorities as equals of ethnic Germans. The authorities have made it clear that bilingual signs will be required in towns that have a linguistic mix of at least 25 percent.

Mexico and U.S. Hope for Accord This Month on a Treaty That Would Allow an Exchange of Prisoners

By ALAN RIDING
Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 2—Mexico and the United States are making rapid progress toward a prisoner-exchange agreement under which Americans sentenced in this country could serve out their terms in jails in their own.

The agreement may be initiated within a month before it is sent for ratification to the Congresses in Washington and Mexico City. A similar pact is being negotiated between the United States and Canada.

The treaty was proposed by Mexico last June, the aim in part to defuse the controversial issue of reported mistreatment of American prisoners here. More than 90 percent of the 600 Americans in Mexican detention are facing narcotics charges or serving sentences for narcotics offenses.

Diplomatic sources say that rapid progress was possible in the talks because both sides are politically committed to reaching an early agreement, ideally before President Luis Echeverría Alvarez leaves office Dec. 1. And so the negotiators are willing to seek ways of getting around the legal obstacles.

Some May Ask New Trials

Perhaps the greatest problem is the possibility that, once repatriated, American prisoners will demand new trials or obtain writs of habeas corpus on the ground that they were convicted on the basis of confessions extracted through torture, or simply had been found guilty unfairly. Prisoners might therefore be freed soon after they returned to the United States.

But during the negotiations Washington agreed to rearrest and return to Mexican jurisdiction any prisoner released prematurely by an American court. The prisoner would then serve out the rest of the original term in Mexico.

Rehabilitation is stressed. Once an American is placed in a Federal prison near a home town, he or she will be subject to local parole rules and jail regulations, but the prisoner can bring over from the Mexican jail any "credits" in work and good behavior that could mean a reduction of sentence.

Treaty Focuses on Americans

While the treaty will apply equally to Americans in Mexican jails and to Mexicans in United States jails, in practice its almost exclusive objective is dealing with the problem of the Americans.

The thousands of Mexicans seized constantly for illegal immigration into the United States are specifically excluded from the treaty because the Mexican Government does not consider them criminals. But there are about 1,500 other Mexicans in American Federal and state penitentiaries.

Mexico is not expected to press for their return, because of the high cost involved and the overcrowded prison conditions here. Before any Mexican is released from a state jail in the United States, special agreements will have to be signed between Washington and each state, red tape that might further discourage the repatriation of Mexicans.

In addition, every repatriation requires the approval of both governments as well as the approval of the individual prisoner.

The Mexican Government may therefore quietly veto applications because, as one Mexican source put it, "we're trying to ship people out of the country, not bring them in."

Brutality Controversy May Remain

Yet even with the treaty, the controversy over American prisoners here may not be erased. The primary complaints of the prisoners are that they are often beaten by the police during questioning and that corrupt lawyers frequently extort large sums of money from them in return for empty promises of early freedom.

But both the mistreatment and the extortions invariably occur during the first days and weeks after arrest, while prisoners can request repatriation only for ing conviction and sentencing. By that should occur within one year, in practice it can take longer.

But it is not certain that all the Americans held here will want to go home. Weekly "conjugal visits" in Mexican prisons enable inmates to have relations with spouses or lovers or prostitutes.

For about $100 a month, a prisoner can live in reasonable comfort in a jail, paying off guards for special privileges as large individuals, higher-quality food, books, television sets to telephones and even extra hours. "Some prisoners are saying they may get the worst of both under the treaty," a diplomat said.

American jails are not so liberal.

S. Mediators Are Getting Good Results With a New Technique That Stresses Frankness and Mutual Goals to years ago, teamsters like United Parcel Service in New York City was in its third month. Elections at the Whirlpool, Corp. in Evansville, Ind., and textile work in Borden's Coated Fabrics plant in Columbus, Ohio, had been on strike for 100 days. So the Federal Mediation Conciliation Service called the negotiators in the three disputes to Washington for intensive, round-the-clock meetings. All three strikes were finally ended.

Federal mediators said that all the walkouts had ended, the basis of them—bad labor relations—continued. The Federal officials therefore decided to try one of their new techniques in preventive mediation—a procedure known as Relationship by Objective.

Through the use of this technique, all three situations have greatly improved, according to John J. Popular 2d, associate director for technical services of the Federal service.

United Parcel, which now has a strike on its hands up and down the East Coast except in New York City, has reported "an amazing turnaround" in day-to-day labor relations in New York, Mr. Popular said, with productivity and cooperation improved.

In Evansville, he said, Whirlpool and the International Union of Electrical Workers are seriously discussing the prospects of an early agreement before next year's contract expiration date. And at Columbus, he said, grievances at Coated Fabrics have dropped by 90 percent, and the management reports improvements in overall labor relationships at the plant.

Mr. Popular and some of those who have participated in experiments in Relationship by Objective (RBO) discussed the technique of group dynamics at a recent conference here on union-management cooperation.

The RBO procedure, Mr. Popular said, is a down-to-earth approach to labor-management relations. Theories are pushed aside, he said, and representatives from both sides, with a full commitment to the effort, meet over a period of two or three days, speak out frankly on their problems and attitudes towards each other, and attempt to develop mutual goals and the means of attaining them.

The key to the entire process is its "focus," Mr. Popular said. Instead of hammering out agreements at the lofty level of the company's board room or international union headquarters, RBO seeks to enlist participants at the plant level, where the actual problems occur. Therefore, mediators work largely with union committeemen and key supervisors right off the shop floor.

This is where the all-important communications take place, and it is the plant-level union committeemen and managers who must come to terms and learn to deal with each other in good faith."

Hezekiah Brown, a Federal mediator from New York who worked closely with Local 804 of the Teamsters and United Parcel during their RBO experience, said the procedure did not necessarily eliminate problems, but did create a climate in which problems could be resolved.

"It is not to be held out as a panacea, permanent or otherwise, or as a prescription for all labor-management ills," he said. "It will not turn a union into a com-

Ouster of Director Sets Off Sit-In by Supporters at Lincoln Hospital

By RONALD SULLIVAN
The New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation has dismissed J. Cesar Galarce as executive director of Lincoln Hospital in the South Bronx on the ground that he had demoralized the medical staff and endangered patient care to the point where the municipal institution could have lost its accreditation.

Mr. Galarce's ouster, effected Monday night and announced yesterday by a spokesman for the corporation, touched off a protest demonstration at the hospital.

Scene of Strife

Esteban Figueroa, the vice chairman of the hospital's Community Advisory Board and a political lieutenant of City Councilman Ramon Velez, said the demonstrators, some of whom he described as job-seekers, would stay where they were until the corporation agreed to authorize an "impartial review" of Mr. Galarce's administration.

Since the opening of the new hospital last summer as a replacement for the old Lincoln Hospital, it has been torn by strife between the medical and administrative staff, and rival political forces in the South Bronx.

The political conflict reached to City Hall, where Deputy Mayor Stanley M. Friedman reportedly sided with Mr. Velez and blocked the corporation's efforts to remove Mr. Galarce, a political protégé of the City Councilman.

The move to save Mr. Galarce was made despite reports of deteriorating medical services and administrative mistakes that had undermined the hospital's capacity to serve the poor, predominantly Hispanic neighborhoods of the South Bronx.

According to corporation officials, their initial efforts 10 days ago to oust Mr. Galarce were blocked by Mr. Friedman, who has strong ties to the Bronx Democratic organization and, in turn, to Mr. Velez and the political forces in the South Bronx that support Mr. Galarce.

While the demonstrators, virtually all of them Hispanics, vowed to defy any effort to remove them, Representative Herman Badillo urged the police to arrest them and remove them from the hospital.

Mr. Badillo is a political enemy of Mr. Velez, whom he defeated in the bitterly contested Democratic Congressional primary in September. In a telephone interview, Mr. Badillo interrupted an election-night celebration to warn that the demonstrators were endangering patients and that "somebody could die."

However, Laymond Robinson, a spokesman for the corporation, which operates the city's municipal hospitals, said there would be no attempt to dislodge the demonstrators as long as they did not interfere with the hospital's administration or its medical care.

As a consequence, police officers withdrew from the hospital during the afternoon, leaving Mr. Figueroa apparently in charge.

Although Henry Karpe, a corporation troubleshooter who recommended Mr. Galarce's ouster, was appointed an interim executive director, he was not at the hospital yesterday.

Since Election Day is a city holiday, the hospital's administration offices were closed, and the full impact of the demonstration is not expected to be felt until today.

Board Deplores Leadership

According to Mr. Robinson, Mr. Galarce was called down to the corporation's central office at 125 Worth Street on Monday night and asked to resign and return to a position he once held there.

Mr. Robinson said that Jack Koretzky, the corporation's executive vice president, had told Mr. Galarce that his continued presence in the hospital could prompt the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals and the State Health Department to deny the institution both its accreditation and its operating certificate.

Last week, the hospital's medical board approved a resolution that "deplored" Mr. Galarce's leadership and reported an "atmosphere of terror, tension and among staff and hospital workers." Dr. Gabriel Koz, the president of the board and the hospital's director of psychiatry, said yesterday that he hoped the removal of Mr. Galarce would restore the confidence of the medical staff to provide quality medical care.

"Patient care cannot survive in a political jungle," Dr. Koz said in a telephone interview. "We don't want the hospital used any longer as a political source of patronage and power."

During the last few months, as medical staff members complained of what was described as "repression and interference" by Mr. Galarce and Mr. Velez, Dr. Koz was reported to have received numerous threats on the telephone late at night.

Mr. Figueroa, who replaced Mr. Galarce as chairman of the advisory board two weeks ago, defended Mr. Galarce and Mr. Velez. He contended that the corporation was in no position to oust anyone, and it was under attack itself for mismanaging the city's hospitals.

Mr. Figueroa also charged that a man investigation conducted by Mr. Karpe and Pedro Velez for the corporation was inadequate and biased against Mr. Galarce.

He warned that if the corporation refused to conduct what he called an "impartial review," the number of demonstrators would swell today and increase daily until his demands were met.

How can a cigarette be de-tarred, but not de-tasted?

It seems hard to believe. Most low-tar cigarettes are low-taste cigarettes. So who's kidding who? If Pall Mall Extra Mild has only 7 mg. tar, how can it be an exception? The reason Pall Mall Extra Mild is de-tarred, but not de-tasted is because it has the Air-Stream filter that reduces tar—but not taste.

What's more Pall Mall Extra Mild starts with really great tasting tobaccos. Tobaccos specifically selected for extra mild taste. And when you've got great taste to begin with, you've got great taste to end with. Try a carton. You'll find it hard to believe you're smoking a cigarette with less tar than 95% of all cigarettes sold!

Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous to Your Health.

7 mg. "tar", 0.6 mg. nicotine av. per cigarette by FTC method.

"Imagine us enjoying tax-free income, just like the rich. For only $1000!"

"It's an investment even we can afford."

Introducing the Tax-Free Bond Fund that gives you, the average investor, maximum flexibility. And makes your participation in a portfolio of municipal bonds remarkably easy. For a minimum investment of $1000, you may now be part-owner of a wide range of bonds, each of which is rated A or higher. In a manner that, until recently, never before existed.

"We pay no sales charge."

Every dollar of your investment goes right to work for you. Nothing is taken off the top. Which can mean pretty substantial savings. What's more, once you've invested the minimum $1000, you enjoy the option of adding to your investment as often as you like for as little as $25 or more.

"We earn tax-free income every day."

As a Fund participant, you earn tax-free income every day. (As opposed to taxable income on your savings account.) Further, the Fund may offer you higher earnings (after taxes) than a bank does. And features a special reinvestment privilege. This means you can re-invest your tax-free earnings in additional shares every month, thus compounding the earnings of your account.

"We don't pay a penalty for early withdrawal."

Flexibility is a key aspect of your portfolio. It means you have immediate—and free—withdrawal rights at any time. There's no penalty for early withdrawal like there is on long-term bank savings accounts. And should you decide to redeem your Fund shares, you need not wait to find a buyer. Your shares will be redeemed immediately.

"A monthly transaction statement means we're in control of our investment."

It works just like your personal monthly bank statement, telling you how many shares you own, the current value of each share and the tax-free income you've earned. And it provides you with a complete detailed history of your account from the day you begin.

"It's nice to know our investment is fully managed by Oppenheimer."

To meet the objectives of tax-free income and preservation of capital, your bond portfolio will be guided, full-time, by Oppenheimer's professional know-how and experience. In fact, Oppenheimer Management Corp. and its subsidiaries are presently managing over $1.4 billion for more than a half-million shareholders around the world. It's this kind of money management experience that stands behind your municipal bond portfolio.

Children's Aid Society's Pretrial Guidance Program Is Helping to Change Lives of Youthful Offenders

Seven months ago 20-year-old Antonio Taylor was mugging people on the streets of Harlem. But now he can proudly show his high school equivalency diploma. He plans to go to college, and he has a job as a stockboy making $150 a week.

Mr. Taylor's life took a turn when he was placed on probation earlier this year after being arrested and found guilty of a mugging. Instead of rejoining his buddies on the street, he joined the Pretrial Diversion program run by the Children's Aid Society.

Unlike most of the 177 youths who have been part of the program since it started 17 months ago, Mr. Taylor was not referred by the Legal Aid Society or recruited from Rikers Island; he was handed a leaflet about the program in court, and he walked voluntarily into the Dunleavy Center at 14-32 West 118th Street.

"I felt I needed to do something for myself," he said recently in the recreation room at the community center. Looking back on the seven muggings he had taken part in, he shrugged as he tried to figure out "why hanging out on the streets once seemed to good."

At the center, Mr. Taylor was assigned a counselor, Charles Green; he received psychological and educational testing and tutoring. He could share all of the activities at the center with youths who were close to his own age—and some of whom did not have criminal exposure—without being stigmatized for having once been in trouble with the law.

Mr. Green says that if Mr. Taylor, who dropped out of school in the 10th grade, went to college, he would be the first in his family of seven to finish high school or to go to college.

Willis Toms, the director of the diversion program, said that most of the youths who joined the program came from troubled, poverty-stricken homes.

He said that the years 16 to 20 were dangerous ones for youths in Harlem. It is then that many begin to drop out of school, hang out on street corners and commit crimes.

Of the youths in the program so far, Mr. Toms said, 28 have completed it, 33 have been rearrested and 50 have dropped out. The 66 others are still in it.

Mr. Toms said he had found that most of the youths who entered the program read on the third-grade level; some can't read at all.

Their inability to read satisfactorily, he said, contributes to their dropping out of school, and "because they do not have skills, they cannot get work, and then they turn to stealing and robbery."

The diversion program, Mr. Toms said, does not recruit drug users, because there are no facilities to help them. Nor does it recruit youths who have committed serious felony crimes, like attempted murder, "because usually bail is too high."

But the program does look for youths who have been newly charged with crimes and who are new to the prison system. Through jobs, education and help with a multitude of personal and family problems, the program seeks to guide these young people away from the street and the pressures that caused them to turn to crime.

To run the program, the Children's Aid Society gets $130,000 a year from the Law Enforcement Assistance Corporation.

As for Mr. Taylor, who was playing Ping-Pong with his counselor the other day, he said he had tried unsuccessfully to persuade some of his friends to join the program.

"I asked them what was so good about the street," he noted. "They can't answer and I can't answer it either. All I know is I'm definitely not going back."

closed, that voting in her state would reach the highest level since 1952, despite months of predictions that as little as half of the voting age population might choose to vote.

ter appeared to be winning margins among both blacks and Americans; in fact, early figures that Mr. Ford was narrow among white voters, according to results of a CBS News poll, which covered about 100,000 voters and was made available to the New York Times under a special arrangement.

Mr. Carter was the 11th person to vote in Plains, Ga., the rural hamlet he left 22 months ago to begin a quest for the Presidency that was dismissed as an absurdity by the elders of his party until he won his first primary victories.

Role for Independents
Candidates held the key, and they turned to the President by a narrow margin. It was not clear early last week whether the trend would continue or be enough to give Mr. Ford a victory.

He wept as he watched the unveiling of an airport mural depicting his life and the audience, struggling to maintain his composure, that he owed everything to his mother and father. He was obviously completely exhausted.

Mr. Carter was accompanied on the aircraft by his wife, Rosalynn; his daughter, Amy, and one of his sons and one of his daughters-in-law.

Mr. Carter said that he was "not surprised" by the large voter turnout around the nation.

Carter, in Confident Mood, Talks of Transition Plans

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times
ATLANTA, Nov. 2 — "The polls took a dive," Jimmy Carter remarked tonight as he flew from his home in Plains, Ga., to Atlanta to hear the election results.

"The safest strategy for them is to say it's too close to call," said Mr. Carter, in reference to his own campaign polls, taken by Patrick H. Caddell of Cambridge, Mass.

Democratic nominee spoke before nearly 3,000 of his neighbors, friends, relatives and members of the throngs that came here hoping to participate later in a victory celebration for him.

Mr. Carter said that he was "not surprised" by the large voter turnout around the nation.

FORDS CAST BALLOTS IN OLD NEIGHBORHOOD

Then Return to the White House From Grand Rapids to Watch the Election Returns

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 — President Ford confronted the suspense and peculiar calm of Election Day with a rare mid-afternoon nap at the White House.

Mr. Ford was prepared for a long night of uncertainty, but he had promised his campaign staff to visit them at the Sheraton Park Hotel here as soon as the outcome took shape.

After the television networks projected Carter victories widely through the South and in significant states in the East, James Baker, the President's campaign manager, appeared at the press center at the Sheraton Park Hotel to insist that he and the President were still hopeful.

Mr. Carter had contributed his own vote to his cause early this morning shortly after the poll opened in a tiny, concrete building just a few blocks from his home.

The painting by Paul Collins resembled a family photo album of Grand Rapids' most famous son and the only President from Michigan. It included scenes of Mr. Ford as an Eagle Scout, in football uniform, in a Model T Ford automobile, on the way to Congress with his bride in 1948 and finally, under the 1974 newspaper headline: "Ford Becomes President."

Several times last night and this morning Grand Rapids nearly broke Mr. Ford's heart on his emotions. His last speech outside the Pantlind Hotel last night was "the hardest to make," he said; "because as I look out in this audience and as I saw so many people as we came down Munroe Avenue—Republicans, Independents and Democrats—people that Betty and I lived with, that Betty and I love, that I tried to help in the many years I had the great honor of representing this great Congressional District."

Campaign Over, Mondale Keeps Date With Dentist

By JOHN M. CREWDSON
Special to The New York Times

AFTON, Minn., Nov. 2—An exhausted Walter F. Mondale arrived here early today at the end of an 18-hour campaign trek through five states capped by a boisterous rally in President Ford's home state of Michigan, where the Senator was briefly reunited with Jimmy Carter, the Presidential nominee with whom he shares the Democratic ticket.

After leaving the enthusiastic crowd of more than 7,000 people that had jammed into the Flint, Mich., Auditorium, Senator Mondale, his wife, Joan and his son Teddy, who has traveled with him for much of the last 10 weeks, flew to Minneapolis and then joined a motorcade for the 40-mile trip to this east-central Minnesota town.

The Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee slept for six hours at the home of Mrs. Mondale's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Maxwell Adams, overlooking St. Croix Lake. The Mondales, including 19-year-old Teddy, departed shortly before 7 o'clock for the Afton Village Hall, where they had to wait in line with some of the town's 1,100 residents before casting their ballots.

Senator Tells How He Voted

After a delay that he said had been caused by "getting Teddy cleared," Senator Mondale emerged to announce how he had voted—"for Jimmy Carter and his running mate."

The Senator walked 100 yards to the Afton House for a "typical Norwegian breakfast of bacon and eggs," then drove to Minneapolis to keep a longstanding appointment with his dentist, Dr. Roger Mondale, his nephew. The Senator was pronounced free of cavities and expressed his pleasure by flashing the sort of wide, toothy grin that has been more typical of his running mate.

The Senator attended a Polynesian lunch with members of his campaign staff. It was closed to reporters, but according to one participant it was highlighted by several skits that lampooned Mr. Mondale and the campaign in general.

Later, Mr. Mondale and his wife toured an exhibition of paintings of life along the banks of the Mississippi River, whose headwaters are 250 miles northwest of here.

Senator Walter F. Mondale, Democratic Vice-Presidential candidate, and his wife, Joan, wait for their turn to vote at the village hall in Afton, Minn.

As the Mondale party entered the Walker Art Center, the Senator asked an artist at work on a mural of the Minneapolis skyline whether he would paint in a Carter sign above the roofs. The young man smiled and shook his head.

Despite his obvious fatigue, the Senator was in high spirits on the flight from Flint to Minneapolis. He passed out cigars to everyone aboard his leased aircraft, the Minnesota Fritz. The Senator's middle name is Frederick, and his nickname is Fritz.

Commandeering the airplane's public address system, Mr. Mondale, after cautioning the reporters on board that the speech that followed would be "embargoed for two years," told a number of anti-Republican jokes that had been prepared by his speechwriters for possible use in the campaign but rejected for various reasons.

CHICAGO, Nov. 2 (AP)—The manufacturer of Jim Beam bourbon whisky announced today that it has refused to participate in the Arab boycott of Israeli goods. The James B. The company said that in compliance with Federal law, it has reported the Arab request and the refusal to comply. "We wish to make it very clear that Beam will not comply with any Arab trade restrictions," an executive of the company said.

DOLE, IN HOMETOWN, VOTES WITH FAMILY

Receives an Enthusiastic Welcome From Russell, Kan., Residents, Then Flies to Washington

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND
Special to The New York Times

RUSSELL, Kan., Nov. 2—Senator Robert J. Dole ended his campaign for the Vice Presidency today the way he began it—with a visit to his hometown.

On Aug. 20, the day after he received the nomination, the 53-year-old candidate flew with President Ford to this western Kansas farming community of 3,000 to open their election drive.

Today, 10½ weeks, more than 62,000 miles and 44 states later, Senator Dole came home to vote.

After flying from Kansas City, Mo., this morning to Great Bend, a 50-minute motorcade drive away, the Senator was warmly welcomed by several hundred of his townsfolk and the local high school and junior high school bands at a rally on the front steps of his mother's modest brick house at 1035 West 11th Street.

Arriving under gray skies with a brisk wind whipping across the flat countryside to the waves of scores of residents, Senator Dole first introduced his wife, Elizabeth Hanford Dole, a member of the Federal Trade Commission who has been on leave while campaigning for her husband.

Past Victories Cited

Mrs. Dole, a North Carolina native, said: "There'll be no people that I'll remember more than the people of Russell, Kan., for all they've done for Bob over the years, not only when he got back from the war, but in every election, which he has always won."

Senator Dole, a twice-wounded and twice-decorated veteran of World War II, who lost a kidney and most of the use of his right arm, then took the stand and said:

"I've been saying right along that we'll carry Russell County. I haven't seen so many people on my front lawn since maybe after one of our basketball games. We didn't draw quite the crowd we did with the President, but it's not bad for a Vice-Presidential candidate."

Smiling, he went on: "This is the greatest country on the face of the earth, but none of us is perfect—well, I see a few out in the audience, but none from my class."

Glancing out over the crowd and noticing a sign supporting Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential candidate, he said: "I appreciate even the countersign. You usually find one in a crowd in this size."

Lapsing back into the folksiness of West Kansas, he drew a chuckle from the audience by saying, "I guess I couldn't invite you all in for lunch."

Then he added that he didn't want to "tax the Chamber of Commerce," but that since "we're going to Salisbury, N.C., Elizabeth's hometown, for a victory celebration tomorrow if we win," he would "come back here for a victory celebration."

As the rally ended and reporters their articles from telephones set his mother's one-car garage, Dole, his wife, his mother, Bina, daughter by a previous marriage, set out for the Simpson Elementary School about two blocks away to the voting booth, spent four minutes and 15 seconds marking his paper ballot. "I couldn't make up my mind," with a grin.

After voting, the Senator visited or five of the school's classrooms before heading back to Washington to await the election results.

Asked whether he had attended school, the Senator said wryly: "to the school that was standing when I left, they built a new one."

Robert J. Dole and his wife, Elizabeth, returning to Washington from Russell, Kan., the Senator's hometown, where he cast his ballot.

Political Division of the Legislature
In New York Apparently the Same

By LINDA GREENHOUSE

New Yorkers appeared headed last night for another two years with a politically divided State Legislature, as early returns gave the Democrats a continued hold on the 150-seat Assembly and the Republicans a continued majority of the 60-seat Senate.

The Republicans, making a strong effort against the vulnerable freshman Democrats from normally Republican upstate Assembly districts, appeared likely to pick up a few seats. Incumbent Democratic Assemblymen who appeared to be losing included K. Daniel Haley of Waddington, Ronald Stott of North Syracuse and Melvin N. Zimmer of Syracuse.

But at the same time, the Democrats picked up a seat with the defeat of Serphin R. Makase, the head of the statewide Conservative Party, who was a heavy favorite to succeed Rosemary R. Gunning from a conservative-oriented Assembly district in Queens. Mr. Makase was defeated by Clifford Wilson, an aide to Representatives James L. Delaney.

The two parties ran expensive and for the Legislature—political campaigns, with polling, media specialist and other accoutrements of modern political efforts. The Senate Republican Campaign Committee raised about $175,000, the Assembly Republicans about $75,000, and the Democrats' joint Senate Assembly Campaign Committee more than $200,000.

For the first time, the Senate Democrats had a television campaign, urging viewers "wherever you live, vote for Democratic State Senator."

Acutely aware that their new majority propelled as it had been by Watergate, and Hugh L. Carey's gubernatorial victory, could turn out to be a tenuous one, Democrats in the Assembly planned carefully to give their freshmen members key bills to carry and important committees to sit on, all designed to enhance their re-election chances.

The Senate Republicans, meanwhile tried just as hard to make sure that the freshmen Democrats' bills met a speedy demise.

A Columbia Residence Hall Offers a New Way of Life

When a telephone repair man visited George Barry Ford Hall on West 114th Street, near Columbia University, not long ago, the first thing he spotted on the wall of the remodeled brownstone was a crucifix.

"Is this a monastery or something?" he asked.

No, replied David Beazer, a Columbia junior who lives in the house. But he was hard-pressed to explain exactly what Ford Hall was, because he, like most of the house's residents, are still talking and arguing about how to characterize their experiment in Christian community.

Ford Hall is actually two buildings. They were leased by the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York in 1974 to provide a place where Columbia's Catholic students could establish the sort of community that often eludes those who live in the tenements and dormitories that make up the Columbia campus.

Quarters for Men and Women

The buildings—which house 24 men and women, all but three of whom are Catholic—are named for the Rev. George Barry Ford, the 91-year-old former Columbia University chaplain. Father Ford, who has spent 45 years in the priesthood, is known as a fighter for human rights, a pioneer in the ecumenical movement and a friend of many of New York's best-known citizens.

Basically Ford Hall is an unusual blend of religious commitment and tolerance. "Religion is in the air," says the Rev. Joseph Nisa, who is living at the house while doing graduate work at Teacher's College.

Thomas Ichniowski, a former resident, says: "It's a whole set of shared symbols, practices, ways of looking at things."

Joseph Portnova, a graduate student in Roman and Byzantine studies who moved into the house a few months after it opened in February 1975, observes: "In the first place, if it hadn't been for religion, the house probably wouldn't have come into existence."

The form that Ford Hall's religiosity takes does not involve much in the way of regular ritual. Mass at the house is said only occasionally, and there are no compulsory prayer meetings.

Rather, the religious tone of the house comes from shared understandings about God, and, in many cases, a common experience of a childhood and adolescence in which the church played an important role in social as well as religious life.

Ford Hall did not arrive at a laissez-faire position on religious practice without a lot of argument.

"Much of the first year was spent arguing or discussing—if it was after midnight, it was arguing—what the house was about," says Mr. Portnova.

"The arguments were about exactly how religious the house should be. We argued about whether there should be prayers at dinner, whether there should be a set of religious rules, things like that."

The discussions were at times bitter. Two people left the house when it decided not to adopt more stringent rules.

Prayer Group Formed

But the current situation is satisfactory, even for those like Daniel Mikulsky of Yonkers, who wanted a more explicit religious commitment.

"The house can only be as Catholic as the people living here," says Mr. Mikulsky. "I don't want to have any rules imposed on people. I don't want people put off by rules and strange customs."

Mr. Mikulsky and several other students have established their own ecumenical prayer group, which draws participants from within and outside the hall.

"To people who live here, we're Ford Hall, or simply 'the house,'" says Joseph Giovannelli, another resident. "But to people on the outside, we're 'The Catholic House.' People have a lot of preconceived notions of what the house is."

Many house residents report that their friends who drop by for dinner—the only regular house ritual—are almost always surprised to discover that students at Ford Hall are not, on the surface, much different from other Columbia students.

What they often find out, however, and what residents believe, is that religious faith does have an important effect on the way people in the house treat one another.

"Here, you can open yourself up to people without being stomped on," says Mary A. Jonaitis, a nursing student who moved into the house mainly to avoid living in the dorms.

"This is a kind of extended family," says Mr. Portnova. "Outside, you'll be competing with other students so much that you often don't get a chance to know them."

As an example of how social relations in the house differ from those outside, Father Nisa notes that when parents visit their sons and daughters, they are usually taken door to door to be introduced and then escorted to the kitchen for coffee or dinner.

Until now, much activity in the house has been directed toward making it a fit place to live.

Renovated by Students

When the students moved in two years ago, the buildings required a good deal of renovation, much of which was done by the students themselves. They were helped by $11,000 contributed by Father Ford's friends and Columbia alumni and also by a $15,000 loan from the university.

Private contributors and the students, through part of their room and board payments, will repay the university by 1979.

Officially the Catholic Archdiocesan Department of Education rents the building from the university, which recognizes Ford Hall as an official residence. Room and board in the hall are slightly lower than in the dorms, another factor that has helped to increase the number of students applying every year.

House residents now hope to turn some of their attention away from the physical rehabilitation of the house to the question of what religious and social activities the house should sponsor.

75% of Women Physicians In Detroit Survey Report They Do Housework, Too

DETROIT, Oct. 29 (AP)—Three of four women physicians surveyed in the Detroit area said they took care of all their families' cooking, shopping, child care and money management in addition to their patients' health.

The survey, reported in the current Journal of the American Medical Association, also indicated that the women physicians earned less than their male counterparts and rarely held high-status positions in their profession.

Dr. Marilyn Heins of the Wayne State University School of Medicine and Sus Smock of the school's Center for Urban Studies surveyed 87 Detroit-area women who had been trained as doctors.

Two-thirds of the women said, however, that they had domestic help one or two days a week to assist with laundry and cleaning chores. The remaining third said they did all their own housework.

The average family income among women doctors, most of whom have working husbands, was lower than the average family income of male doctors, few of whom had working wives, the study said. Forty-three percent of the women doctors are married to doctors.

"I don't think there's any question that there is sex discrimination in medicine," Dr. Heins said.

She said the survey findings contradicted an assumption held by some medical educators that training women for the profession was a waste of time because they tended to leave to care for their families.

The study indicated that 84 percent of the women were doing medical work and 90 percent were working full-time at some job.

The researchers said only 7 percent were not working for reasons related to sex. The others not working were physically disabled or had retired.

BROCK OF TENNESSEE LOSES SENATE SEAT

Republican Defeated by Sasser as State's 10 Electoral Votes Go to Carter

By WAYNE KING
Special to The New York Times

NASHVILLE, Nov. 2—United Tennessee Democrats turned the one-term Republican Senator, Bill Brock, out of office today and gave the state's 10 electoral votes for the Presidency to Jimmy Carter, the Democratic candidate, over President Ford.

Mr. Brock, 45 years old, was defeated by James R. Sasser, 40, the former chairman of the state's Democratic Party. He is a lawyer who has never held public office. Both men are considered conservative, but Mr. Sasser was thought to be the more moderate.

Concluding a campaign marked more by venom than substance on both sides, Mr. Brock failed to capture the substantial margins he needed in normally Republican eastern Tennessee to overcome Democratic power in the West.

The campaign was a heated, bruising one right up to the final day, with Mr. Brock running newspaper and television ads identifying Mr. Sasser with the scandal-tainted administration of Gov. Ray Blanton, whom Mr. Sasser helped into office as chairman of the Democratic Party and Mr. Blanton's campaign manager.

Several Indicted

Several members of the Blanton Administration have been indicted in connection with alleged illegalities in the sale of surplus state property. A Federal inquiry is also under way into allegations of sale of pardons and paroles.

The ads were withdrawn a few days ago after Mr. Sasser warned newspapers and television stations carrying them that he was prepared to bring libel suits if they were continued and that the ads were paid for by a committee that was illegally constituted.

In the Brock advertisements, a purported voter lamented casting his ballot for the "Sasser-Blanton machine" and made note of the scandals and a "raid" on the Governor's office—actually the subpoenaing of records relating to pardons and paroles.

Republicans also took to calling the Blanton Administration "a little Watergate" in the closing week of the campaign.

For his part, Governor Blanton fired

Hartke Loses 4th-Term Bid in Indiana Senate Race

By PAUL DELANEY
Special to The New York Times

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 2—Luck ran out today for Senator Vance Hartke, the Indiana Democrat who averted defeat by less than 5,000 votes in the primary earlier this year and in the general election in 1970.

The controversial Senator was denied a fourth term in an overwhelming victory by former Mayor Richard G. Lugar of Indianapolis, a moderate Republican. In the gubernatorial race, the Republican incumbent, Otis R. Bowen, easily won re-election to a second term over Secretary of State Larry A. Conrad, a Democrat.

The turnout here was good, with the weather clear and sunny over most of the state. This apparently helped the Republican ticket.

Mr. Lugar led Senator Hartke substantially in the polls throughout the campaign, and those predictions proved correct in the tabulating today.

With reports in from 62 percent of the state's 4,599 precincts, the tally was:

Lugar $11,573
Hartke $39,808

In a victory speech, Mr. Lugar reiterated some of his campaign positions. Flanked by his wife, four sons, mother and other relatives at Republican headquarters, he declared:

"We appreciate this opportunity for service. Let's serve the people. Let's think about the things people want; let's cut back the bureaucracy and give the people some freedom."

According to the pre-election public opinion polls, Senator Hartke's luck was running out. The major polls had Mr. Lugar leading throughout the campaign.

Some showed the Senator even trailing badly in Evansville, his home area, where he served as Mayor from 1956 to 1958.

A Lucky Senator

Mr. Hartke had a reputation as a lucky Senator. He was elected to the Senate in 1958, a Democratic year when Republicans throughout the country lost on the "right-to-work" issue. He was re-elected in the Lyndon Johnson landslide of 1964, and again in 1970. But that year, he won by only 4,600 votes over a conservative Republican. And in the primary this year, he squeaked by with another 4,000-vote margin.

Throughout the campaign this fall, back a fuselage of allegations against Mr. Brock, including a contention that he "ripped off the taxpayers of Tennessee" through large income tax deductions. The Governor also attempted to link Mr. Brock with alleged improprieties in the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

'Learned' From Nixon

Governor Blanton also accused Mr. Brock of "misuse of power in politics," and said he had "learned his lessons well" from former President Nixon.

The allegation referred to Governor Blanton's contention that the indictments

Senator Vance Hartke was joined by his wife, Martha, and sons, Wayne, left, and Keith, as he conceded defeat in Indianapolis last night.

Senator Hartke reminded voters of his opponent's relationship to former President Richard M. Nixon, as well as to President Ford. Mr. Lugar was widely regarded as "President Nixon's favorite mayor" and was considered one of the party's future stars, possibly a Presidential candidate. As president of the United States Conference of Mayors, Mr. Lugar, in effect, ran interference for the Nixon Administration's urban programs.

"Nixon, Ford and Lugar apparently think people cause inflation by going to work everyday," Senator Hartke told audiences in attacking what he called the "Nixon-Ford-Lugar approach" to economic problems.

Mr. Hartke also made use of several of his colleagues in the Senate, who came here to testify to his importance to the Senate and to the value of his 18 years of incumbency. Among the senators who campaigned for Mr. Hartke were Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, the Senate majority whip, and Abraham A. Ribicoff of Connecticut. They also served to confirm his report to residents that he would be and parole investigation resulted from a "political conspiracy" among Republicans.

The decision by the Brock forces to undertake an all-out assault on the Blanton Administration, and to link Mr. Sasser with it, apparently was made about three weeks ago when Mr. Sasser passed the Senator in public opinion polls.

Just as this was happening, the Brock campaign was hurt seriously by the disclosure that the Senator had paid only $2,026 in Federal income taxes in 1975 on an income of $51,670. Lapel buttons began to appear saying, "I paid more taxes than Brock."

His opponent, the 44-year-old Mr. Lugar, a boyish-looking professor of government who boasts that he has not cut a class at Indiana Central University during the campaign, said he favored small budget deficits, cutbacks in welfare, systematic tax cuts for individuals and businesses, and higher defense spending. Explaining what seems to be contradictory, Mr. Lugar said tax cuts would stimulate the economy, thereby producing higher revenues that would go away with the deficits. He describes himself as a "moderate conservative."

While Mr. Hartke fought for his political life in the primary, spending $300,000 while his challenger, Representative Philip H. Hayes, dragged out the Hartke skeletons, the wealthy Mr. Lugar coasted to victory on the Republican side.

Primary Fight Aided Lugar

The former Mayor of the state's largest city benefited immensely from the Democratic primary fight. Senator Hartke depleted his funds in the primary, and his campaign has suffered, while the Lugar campaign found it easier to raise money.

Scene at Campaign Headquarters Biding Time before the (?) Hur

By MOLLY IVINS

By 10 o'clock last night, the New York City headquarters for President Ford and Jimmy Carter had taken on, respectively, the aura of a bunker nestled down for a long siege and a party where everyone was too nervous to have fun.

At Ford headquarters, Pippins restaurant, formerly the site of Toots Shor's, the place looked rather like a singles' bar suddenly invaded by vast numbers of worried, middle-aged Republicans. The rock band in the front room played "I Can't Get No Satisfaction" so loud that the voice of Walter Cronkite, broadcasting over television sets in the back room, was drowned out entirely.

At Carter's city headquarters, the Imperial Ballroom of the Americana Hotel, a more traditional election-night affair was under way. Whenever a newscaster on any one of the five television sets in the huge room cast a Democratic victory any stout cheering ensued. Most of present sported Carter/Mondale tons and had been active in the campaign. But a fair sprinkling were who had come in from the cold.

Barry Miller, 36 years old, rather lost in his surplus-stripe coat. He told a reporter that he illuminated Yo-Yo's for a living, asked why he was at the Carter he said: "I passed by the arena every body coming in. And out and I've got nothing to do."

Like all retirement plans, ours also benefits you later. If you're 30 now and deposit $1,500 a year, by the time you're 65—based on the highest interest rates currently available—you'll have over $290,000*.

Added to what you get from Social Security, that can mean real social security.

By the way, if that figure of $1,500 a year scares you a little, relax. At The Manhattan Savings Bank, you can start an IRA account with as little as $100 and get the highest savings bank interest rates allowed by law.

Mrs. Meyner, who lost to Mr. Maraziti in 1972 before defeating him two years ago, was leading Mr. Schuter 48,611 to 46,983 with 47 percent of the votes count.

A "Watergate Baby"

Mrs. Meyner was one of four "Watergate babies"—Democrats elected following the Watergate scandal—who were the special target of the state Republican organization during the election campaign.

The others, Representative Andrew Maguire of the Seventh District in Bergen County; William J. Hughes in the Second District, which includes the southern part of the state, and James J. Florio in the First District, which includes Camden County and parts of Burlington County, all won re-election.

Mr. Maguire and his Republican opponent, James J. Sheehan, a former Mayor of Wyckoff, staged one of the more active face-to-face campaigns in the state. Mr. Maguire, a liberal Democrat, helped force changes in some House leadership posts in 1974. Mr. Sheehan, a conservative, beat a moderate Republican, James Quaremba, in a primary contest, and this apparently cost him the unified support of his party.

All other Congressional incumbents won new terms. They include: James J. Howard, Democrat in the Third District; Frank Thompson Jr., Democrat in the Fourth; Millicent H. Fenwick, Republican in the Fifth; Edwin B. Forsythe, Republican in the Sixth; Robert A. Roe, Democrat in the Eighth; Peter W. Rodine Jr., Democrat in the 10th; Joseph G. Miazish, Democrat in the 11th; Matthew J. Rinaldo, Republican in the 12th, and Edward J. Patten, Democrat in the 15th.

Joseph A. Le Fante, a Democrat and Speaker of the State Assembly, won in the 14th district, succeeding Representative Dominick Daniels, the only incumbent who did not seek re-election.

Taxes Are an Issue

The election in New Jersey also was marked by the emergence of an issue that is expected to become increasingly important during next year's gubernatorial and legislative elections—the new state income tax.

Anti-tax groups in several areas formed a loosely knit coalition that turned out demonstrators who made their presence felt at rallies for the Presidential candidates as well as at political gatherings for Congressional candidates.

Republican candidates made political capital out of the issue, since the tax was identified as a "Democratic tax" enacted by Governor Byrne and Democratic majorities in both the Senate and the Assembly.

The issue prevented Mr. Byrne from playing an active role in the campaign. He was not sought as a campaign speaker and, in fact, was shunned by Mr. Carter as the campaign drew its close and the tax controversy became part of the Presidential race.

President Ford took advantage of voter irritation over the tax that was shown in polls by attacking Mr. Byrne for allegedly telling the voters one thing during his bid for office and then "turning his back on them" later by pushing for the tax. He then attempted to transfer any existing antipathy toward Mr. Byrne to Mr. Carter.

Whatever its effect on the outcome of the balloting, the success of anti-tax groups in putting Democratic candidates on the defensive is expected to affect the shape of campaigns for state offices which will begin almost immediately. Spokesmen for the tax organization say they hope to encourage some dates to run on a platform calling for repeal of the 2 percent to 2.5 percent tax on gross incomes.

ABSENTEE BALLOTS CAST BY THE NIXONS

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif., Nov. 2 (Reuters)—Former President Richard M. Nixon and his ailing wife, Pat, voted by absentee ballot in the Presidential elections here today.

Mr. Nixon, who put Gerald R. Ford in the White House when he stepped down in 1974 under pressure of the Watergate scandal, sent for the voting papers at his local polling station in a school just north of his Pacific Ocean villa.

Aides of Mr. Nixon at the former Western White House said the Nixons had voted by absentee ballot. Mrs. Pauline Waterman, a polling official at the school, confirmed: "We have a slip showing that Mr. and Mrs. Nixon sent for their absentee ballots."

United Airlines Accord Reached

CHICAGO, Nov. 2 (AP)—Tentative agreement on a new contract covering United Airlines pilots and flight attendants was announced today. The agreement, reached by the airline and the union for the Air Line Pilots Association, is subject to ratification by the Master Executive Council, a union spokesman said. Details were not released pending ratification.

Husak Visits Moscow

MOSCOW, Nov. 2 (UPI)—Gustav Husak, general secretary of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, arrived in Moscow today for a brief visit at the invitation of the Soviet party. Tass, the Soviet press agency said Mr. Husak met with Leonid I. Brezhnev, in Nikolai V. Podgorny, and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko.

bling casinos were a magnet for organized crime, and said that loan sharks and prostitutes would flock to Atlantic City if casinos were opened there.

In the midst of the noisy crowd in the headquarters of the Committee to Rebuild Atlantic City, an organization of businessmen and public officials who led the drive for the casinos, Mayor Joseph Lasurov acknowledged the dangers.

Mayor Pledges Caution

"The people of New Jersey are handing us a stick of dynamite," the Mayor said. "We are going to prove to them that we know how to handle it."

"Our first order of business will be to meet with the clergy and leading citizens to make sure that casino gambling will fulfill its purposes."

State Assemblyman Steven B. Perskie, the Democrat who shepherded the casino amendment through the State Legislature last summer, said he and other legislators from the area would meet in his office this morning to begin drafting a bill to govern casino operation.

One proposed bill, written by Mr. Perskie, already is in the Legislature, but numerous objections have been raised to portions of it.

During the sometime bitter campaign over the casinos, Mr. Perskie had said that Atlantic City would insist that casinos be operated only by honest and qualified businessmen and that it might take a year or more to get the first one in operation.

An Atlantic City hotel owner who expects to get one of the first gambling licenses, Milton Neustadter, a partner in the Howard Johnson Regency, said casino approval by the voters was "the thing we have been praying for."

Atlantic City residents, who had reacted bitterly when voters rejected the 1974 casino amendment, were still somewhat angry.

"They finally gave us a break," said John Litzia, one of the Atlantic Avenue bartenders handing out free drinks.

New Jersey voters also approved two bond issues on yesterday's ballot—$120 million to be used for developing water supplies and sewage treatment, and $25 million to help low-income and middle-income families buy homes.

A third issue, which would have provided $80 million for renovation of state mental hospitals and the building of a new maximum-security prison, was rejected.

Voters also approved a requirement that all revenue from New Jersey's new state income tax be used for property tax reduction and to allow the state's 1 million elderly residents an extra $50 rebate on their property taxes.

A proposal to raise the maximum price and prize in boardwalk-type games appeared to have been defeated.

The pro-casino groups spent more than $1 million in this year's campaign, much of it during the last week.

Atlantic City businessmen, who had seen their one-time premier resort town deteriorate, said that only gambling casinos could rescue them from potential bankruptcy, and came forth with almost three-quarters of a million dollars to be used in promoting casinos. The remainder of the money came from other areas of the state and from companies hoping to get casino licenses.

Organized under the name the Committee to Rebuild Atlantic City, these businessmen and local public officials flooded New Jersey with assertions that financial benefits from casinos would spill over to other parts of the state.

Research Group Cites Figures

A research group hired by the committee predicted that in 10 years casinos would prompt more than $800 million worth of new construction and create 35,000 new jobs.

The pro-casino committee also said that up to $38 million a year in new state revenue would be generated from a proposed 8 percent tax on the income of the casinos.

The New Jersey Council of Churches, which led the fight against casinos, questioned the economic benefits promised by the pro-casino promoters, and accused the committee of holding out false hope to the state's one million or so elderly and disabled residents that a tax on casino revenue would make life easier for them.

Under the constitutional amendment voted on yesterday, any revenue from a gambling tax would be used in behalf of the elderly and disabled, although some pro-casino ads indicated that the state schools would also benefit.

The Council of Churches argued that the income from the casino tax, even if it was as large as the casino promoters said it would be, would do little or nothing for most of the elderly.

a strong Watergate backlash.
Despite disclaimers by both candidates, the polite and good-natured contest for the United States Senate here was waged over personalities and was marked by two unspoken issues that hovered over the campaign like ghosts.
Senator Weicker, a Greenwich millionaire whose campaign style is marked by fondness for rolled-up shirtsleeves, broad arm-waving gestures, a booming voice and earthy language, rarely mentioned his starring role in the Watergate hearings unless asked, and then usually answered in terms of impersonal constitutional law.

Oil Regulation an Issue
But the 6-foot-4-inch tall Senator has retained the movie-star quality he gained as a maverick freshman Senator during the Watergate hearings, a quality and reputation that drew eager crowds to him wherever he went. His other accomplishments, his voting record and even his Republican Party affiliation were rarely as well known as his Watergate role.

Mrs. Schaffer, despite widespread personal affection for her among the voters, was unable or unwilling to shed her demure lady-like image. In apparent recogin the campaign and made a national energy policy her main issue, attacking Senator Weicker for what she called his "pro-big oil" stand and calling him "the Senator from Texas."

Senator Weicker termed her demands for closer regulation of the oil companies an unrealistic but politically expedient solution.
Senator Weicker ended his campaign last night at a restaurant in Bridgeport, as he did in first election in 1970. He voted early this morning.
Mrs. Schaffer, running from behind, voted early this morning and then continued campaigning at factory gates and shopping centers.
The liveliest Congressional race in the state was in the Fourth District, which takes in most of the Fairfield County Gold Coast towns plus Bridgeport. Representative McKinney, a popular Republican with liberal and independent leanings, was opposed by Geoffrey G. Peterson, a 30-year-old Democrat and former administrative aide to United States Senator Abraham A. Ribicoff.

Mr. Peterson accused Mr. McKinney of indifference to the problems of the district and of conflict of interest for serving on the District of Columbia committee while investing heavily in housing developments in that city.
In the Fifth District, which includes Danbury and the more-rural Fairfield County suburbs, as well as Waterbury and the industrial Naugatuck Valley, Representative Sarasin, was challenged by Michael J. Adanti, the Democratic Mayor of Ansonia. Mr. Sarasin is widely known for his strong record of constituent service and availability to the voters, but was running in a swing district with a heavy Democratic registration.

Knicks and Nets in Trouble, With No Relief in Prospect

not moving. That was their major problem last season. In the 105-101 loss to the Kings, the outcome was still unsettled in the final minutes. The Kings turned the ball over at least five times and failed to score a basket for almost five minutes. The Knicks responded with constant turnovers and forced shots.

After the game, several Knicks wondered out loud about what was happening. Earl Monroe, who had scored 22 points, said: "We lost all five games on our first Western trip last season. If we're gonna do that again, there's not much sense coming back. It's time to get on the track right now and start playing basketball."

Brown Shuffles His Players

The Nuggets, winners of four games, may be one of the toughest teams in the league before the season is over. Larry Brown, the coach, played at North Carolina where the policy is to shuffle players in and out of the lineup. Brown has the personnel to do that. He starts Dan Issel, a 27-point scorer, in the middle and flanks him with Bobby Jones and Gus Gerard. His second front line includes Paul Silas, Willie Wise and Marvin Webster, all good enough to start for most teams. And in the backcourt Brown has the exciting David Thompson.

In the Nuggets' last two seasons in the American Basketball Association they had a 79-5 won-lost record at home. Now, in the N.B.A., they have opened with three home victories.

The Nets caught the Cavaliers on a night in which Cleveland shot only 39 percent and committed 26 turnovers. But the Nets couldn't take advantage of their opportunity. They responded by shooting 36 percent and committing 29 turnovers, mostly because they were not used to Nate Archibald's passes. The only consolation in the 82-75 loss was the play of Jim Fox, the newly acquired 6-10 center. He scored 10 points.

The Braves are also on a three-game losing streak, but are hoping for better things once McAdoo gets back into form. They have a physical team with Adrian Dantley, John Shumate and Don Adams.

The Nets will miss Jones. Tim Bassett will probably be matched against McAdoo, who averaged 30.1 points last season. It won't be an easy task for Tim.

Gullett's Cast Removed

CINCINNATI, Nov. 2 (AP) - Don Gullett, Cincinnati's star left-hander who spun an offer to remain with the world champions, was given a clean bill of health today as orthopedic surgeons removed the cast from his ankle in Boston, according to his agent, Jerry Kapstein. Gullett, who was injured during the World Series, is one of the top free agents available in the draft Thursday in New York.

Town Seeks Rookie Team In Baseball

PAINTSVILLE, Ky. (UPI) - This town is looking for a baseball team. But unlike the publicized efforts of larger cities to attract major league teams, the small eastern Kentucky town has been quietly looking for a team made up of players who have never played professional ball before. Six local businessmen have formed a professional baseball procurement committee in efforts to land a franchise in the Appalachian League, an all-rookie league that currently has teams in Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia.

After quietly making contact with the league's directors and president, Chauncey Devalt, and with some major league teams, the committee is becoming more vocal in making its final push for a team.

The group purchased a three-column, six-inch ad in The Sporting News, proclaiming, "We'd love an Appy franchise."

The ad, addressed, "Dear Appalachian League Directors, (Chauncey, too)," said, "If you haven't heard, Paintsville has a fine facility and a governmental commitment to make it even better. Your kids would love what Paintsville has to offer."

Islanders Scoring

MONDAY NIGHT VANCOUVER, British Columbia, Nov. 1 (AP) - Clark Gillies' goal, on the only shot, New York took in the third period, lifted the Islanders to a 3-2 National Hockey League victory over the Vancouver Canucks tonight. Gillies scored his third goal of the season, as the Islanders made the most of a four-on-one break and broke a 2-2 tie. Denis Potvin blocked a shot by the Canucks' Dave Fortier and the Islanders broke away with only John Grisdale back for the Canucks. Gillies used his three teammates as decoys as he beat Curt Ridley, the Vancouver goalie, with a shot to the far corner.

Denis Potvin scored the other two New York goals, as the Islanders pulled away to a two-point lead over the second-place Philadelphia Flyers in the Patrick Division of the National Hockey League. Ron Sedbauer and Andy Spruce scored first-period goals for the Canucks.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 3 (AP) - Rick Kehoe got two goals and assist and Dunc Wilson in a strong game in goal as theburgh Penguins defeated the Kings, 7-1, tonight in a National Hockey League game. Pierre Larouche scored in the 15 seconds of play and Pittsburgh trailed the game. The Penguins one short-handed goal and four play goals, which tied a team. Larouche's goal came on a away, a 50-foot shot that went the shoulder of the Los Angeles Rocketz goaltender, Rick Kehoe. Six minutes later Kehoe scored first goal, then scored again on a away with only 12 seconds of the second period. Four minutes later, Apps engineered a two break with Apps scoring Apps again early in the final period power play. The Kings' Don Kozak spoiled the Penguins' shutoff midway final period when he knocked a rebound of a shot by Gary Sargeant in front of the goal.

The intelligent alternative.

There are two makes of diesel car sold in America. Ours lists for some $3,000 less.

Peugeot 504 Diesel
List Price, $8,360*

Mercedes 240 D
List Price: $10,275*

Wheelbase: 108.0"
Front headroom: 39.7"
Front legroom: 40.9"
EPA estimated fuel mileage: 35 mpg highway, 27 mpg city
Velour upholstery
Rack and pinion steering Sliding sunroof standard
Metallic paint standard
Electric front windows standard

Front headroom: 39.1"
Front legroom: 42.0"
EPA estimated fuel mileage: 31 mpg highway, 24 mpg city
Vinyl upholstery
Recirculating-ball proportionately powered steering Sliding sunroof $375 extra
Metallic paint $135 extra
Electric windows (front and rear) $308 extra

The price difference between our Peugeot Diesel and a comparably equipped Mercedes 240 D is, perhaps, the most obvious difference between them. Both cars are similar in size and roominess. Both can be had with many of the same comforts (although with Mercedes, you'll have to pay some $1,100 over the base price to have them). Both give you four-wheel independent suspension and steel-belted radials for a smooth, stable ride. Both Mercedes and Peugeot give you the benefit of decades of experience with diesel engines. Since its first production diesel in 1928, Peugeot has built more than a million light diesel engines. Both the Peugeot Diesel and the Mercedes Diesel give you all the operating economies of an engine that has no carburetors to be adjusted and no spark plugs, points, or condensers to be replaced. And of a fuel that averages nationally 64-74 less per gallon than unleaded gasoline.

The significant difference is, Peugeot gives you all this for some $3,000 less (counting Mercedes' $1,100-plus extra charges for essentially the same kind of equipment that's included in Peugeot's list price). So if you're considering a Diesel, be it a sedan or wagon, consider the Peugeot first. Because a diesel car is even more economical when you can get it for thousands of dollars less.

About Education

Community College Overseas-Study Programs Growing

By ROBERT E. TOMASSON

To officials at Rockland Community College, it seemed like a reasonably innovative idea to enliven the humdrum prospect of a summer secretarial class: conduct the eight-week course in London, where the students would work for English businessmen during the day while completing the course work in the evening.

from two weeks to the entire two-year college education.

The courses range from traditional liberal arts studies such as a course on Victorian England, held in London, to Russian history given in Finland and Russia, child welfare conducted in Norway, Sweden and Denmark, to specialized programs designed for special groups such as criminal justice for policemen, held in several countries, and fire protection, held in London.

"brokering," with the administrators matching student and program.

The largest group of students overseas—190—is in Israel, where it is participating in 35 formal programs at 35 educational institutions, including Israel's seven major colleges—"all of them Harvards," according to Steven Beiner, who administers the Israeli programs.

cost. He or she pays transportation, room and board.

The tuition at Rockland Community College for a full-time student is $300 a semester, which is one-third of the cost of educating the student. The state and the county, equally contribute the difference to Rockland, which is part of the State University of New York.

60 More Colleges Interested

Some 60 other community colleges in 24 states have expressed strong interest in the overseas study program, with many of them on the verge of participating, according to the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges.

475 Now Overseas

After a somewhat shaky start, the consortium's overseas programs are well out of the tentative stage, with some 475 students now studying overseas. Almost 2,000 students have participated in the program since its inception.

If you run your own business or a small corporation you know there's never been a simple way for you to set up a tax qualified retirement plan. Until now.

At Dollar Savings Bank, we now have a profit sharing retirement plan that offers you high interest. Approved by the Internal Revenue Service, our new plan has some terrific advantages both for yourself and for your employees.

Your company's contributions are tax deductible within tax law limitations. And you've got a say in how much money is to be contributed, when your employees may participate and how the money is to be distributed. Also, voluntary contributions by participants are permitted.

Tony Randall's a judge on TV, but he's an opera nut in real life. He and his wife of 35 years rarely socialize. "If they don't like opera," he says, "we can't be friends." His only regrets? Not having kids, not being a classical actor.

Where's it happening this week? Right here is where. In the populous, pulsating pages of People.

The mid-70's in print... that's what People is. And it's the mid-70's people who are getting into People. In droves. Why, our circulation stands at 1,800,000 already, which comes out to 10,500,000* adult readers. Not bad for a magazine that's still a long way from its third birthday.

Those readers-by-the-millions are exactly the people any advertiser of people products wants to talk to. They're young, educated, prospering, urban, and venturesome. When it comes to new ideas, new tastes, new fashions and new life-styles, they're always out front.

They read People all the way through—front, middle and back—because it's the one magazine where all their interests come together.

Go through a People yourself and get a load of the advertising variety. You'll see cars, appliances, tobacco, food, travel, liquor, cosmetics, credit cards, and on and on.

You'll see why we went from 43rd to 14th in PIB ad pages in just the first half of this year.

Sure, the momentum's with People. It's the human new marketplace. It's the new media option. *Publisher's estimate.

Suddenly, it's the place to be.

A Crowning Glory, From Yankee Origins

By CRAIG CLABORNE

Many of America's best-known "native" dishes can be traced or related to European origins. Even such a commonplace as a robust fish chowder stems from a French source. The concept is said to have been brought to this country by fishermen who came from the coastal regions of France. The name derives from chaudière or cauldron in which these fishermen made their fish soups and stews. The New England boiled dinner is but another version of a pot au feu or the Italian bollito misto.

One dish that seems to be wholly and originally of Yankee ingenuity is a crown roast of meat, generally, of lamb or pork. If the dish can be found in an Old World incarnation, we have yet to discover it. It is a dish—a touch theatrical—that is easily made and delicious. A crown roast of pork—stuffed with a savory filling—is also relatively inexpensive. One crown roast will serve 10 or 12.

Incidentally, our local butcher assured us that a crown roast of pork would require two rib roasts. The photographs shown here dispute that notion. One rib roast was used when the crown was prepared in our home kitchen.

Crown Roast of Pork

- 1 six-to-seven-pound rib roast of pork with 11 to 13 ribs, the more ribs the better, shaped into a crown (see instructions)
- 3/4 pound cleaned bulk spinach or one 10-ounce package frozen spinach
- 2/3 pound fresh mushrooms
- 1 1/2 tablespoons butter
- 1 cup finely chopped onion
- 1 clove garlic, finely minced
- 1 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- 1 pound lean pork ground with one-eighth pound pork fat
- 1 carrot, trimmed, scraped and cut into two-inch lengths
- 1 onion, coarsely chopped
- 2 sprigs fresh thyme or 1/2 teaspoon dried
- 2 bay leaves

- 1 cup water.
1. Have the crown roast prepared and set aside.
2. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.
3. Drop the spinach in boiling water to cover and cook briefly about one minute. Drain. Chill and press with the fingers and hands to extract most of the moisture. There should be about three-quarters cup firmly packed. Chop it coarsely.
4. Finely chop the mushrooms and process them coarse-fine in a food processor or electric blender.
5. Heat the butter in a skillet and add the mushrooms. Cook until wilted. Add the finely chopped onion and garlic and cook about five minutes longer, stirring often. Add the spinach and nutmeg, salt and pepper and blend well. Cool.
6. Put the ground pork and fat in a mixing bowl and add the mushroom mixture. Add salt to taste and blend well.

7. Sprinkle the roast with salt and pepper. Turn the roast, rib tips down, and add about one-quarter of the pork mixture, pressing it partly into the cavity. Turn the roast over and fill it with the remaining pork mixture, rounding it neatly on top.
8. Pierce the stuffed roast in a baking dish and arrange around it the carrot, coarsely chopped onion, salt, thyme, pepper and bay leaves. Scatter the chopped chine bone around the roast. Bake 45 minutes or until nice and crisp on top. Cover loosely with a sheet of foil and reduce the oven heat to 375 degrees. Bake about one and one-half hours longer. Pour the cup of water into the baking pan, stirring to dissolve the brown particles that cling to the bottom of the pan. Bake 10 minutes longer.
9. Untie the roast and slice it between the ribs. Serve with the strained pan liquid and stuffing. Yield: 10 to 12 servings.

1. First, have the chine bone (the top bone attached to the upper part of the ribs) sawed or hacked away. Save this bone and cut it into 2-inch pieces.

2. "French" the tips of the rib bones at the base. That is to say, use a sharp knife and clean them of all meat from the tip of the rib bones to about an inch down.

3. Make gashes about an inch deep between the ribs at the base. Make these slashes toward the center of the meat. This will facilitate shaping the roast into the "crown" above. Turn the ribs in such a fashion that the two ends meet as shown.

4. Sew and tie the ribs and meat neatly and secure with string. This is ready to be stuffed.

5. The roast as stuffed and ready for the oven.

Is Paris Wearing the Mini Again? Yes

Winter versions of the mini being worn around Paris almost always involve hip-length bulky sweaters, tights or jeans, knitted leg warmers and boots

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Special to The New York Times

PARIS — The minis are on the march here, not only on the runways, where they constitute up to 30 percent of the spring and summer collections at houses as Dorothee Bis and Kenzo. But also on streets, in the hotels and at the fashion showings themselves.

Many of the mini wearers are French, but not all. Men from the Philippines, Hong Kong, Israel and Spain are among those spotted wearing some version of the abbreviated dress.

The sweater more likely than dress it is. The sweater is big and bulky, and it frequently cups the body under the hips.

It's not necessarily worn over bare skin. Legs can be covered with tights, jeans so taut they seem like tights, leg warmers (sometimes two pairs of staggered height) and boots.

There isn't exactly a vast exposure of bare skin, though sometimes appears as when, for example, the bulky sweater is worn with a brief pair of shorts and over-the-knee stockings. There can be an inch or so of flesh where the shorts leave off and before the stockings take over.

Nevertheless, the effect of bulky top and slender leg is very similar to what appears on the runways. Yesterday's mini was a slender, straight-cut affair, with no demarcation for the waistline. Tomorrow's is a big, gathered smock with lots of fullness emanating from the shoulders and belted in somewhere in the vicinity of the hips.

The bulky long sweaters were not the result of spontaneous generation. They did turn up in the fall showings of some of the more advanced French ready-to-wear designers last April.

They were indeed shown with shorts and tights, but this was considered by many observers to be merely a method of presentation. They didn't take it too seriously. They didn't take it seriously at all.

Not so the fashion groupies, for whom fashion is a kind of religion. If one of the stars, such as Kenzo, says mini, they swallow the message whole, down to the last leg warmer.

Consequently, tunic sweaters as well as bloused ones are being worn in the streets exactly as they appeared on the runways six months ago. They're worn with bells to which leather bags are attached. They're wrapped in shawls, jackets or other sweaters. They have turtle-necks or cowls at the top, sometimes hoods.

What with all the leg trappings — the boots, for instance, range from high-heels ankle-length affairs to fleece-lined Arctic designs that reach the knee — the wearers aren't troubled about feeling chilly.

In fact, they say they are terribly comfortable, though it does take a while to get dressed. They're free from all that fabric around their legs, they can move around easily, and with their pouches hanging from belts or shoulder straps, their hands are free to grapple with jackets, parcels, shopping bags and other gear.

But what makes them really happiest is the fact that they are undoubtedly in the avant-garde. Besides the fashion houses whose main thrust is the mini for spring and summer, there is some sort of short outfit in practically every collection, even if it's only Bermuda shorts. The women who have gotten themselves up in long sweater and warm tights — the prevailing version in the streets today — have obviously come in six months ahead of the throng.

For the fashion viewers from the United States, the trend was something of a shock.

"I can't believe all the minis in Paris," said one buyer from the Middle West. "Of course, back home a lot of women are still wearing them," she added.

The acceptance here points up the receptivity of some European women to any fashion as long as it's new. It's not a question of throwing out their wardrobes every six months, since usually they buy only one or two new things a season. By the time the season's over, they're sick of them or have worn them out.

In the United States, most women have more clothes and tend to rotate them. They also plan to keep them in circulation for more than one season.

While this approach is far more practical, it does pass up the opportunity of being the first on the block with whatever is making eyes boggle in fashion circles.

All the Cooks Got Excellent Marks, But the Pheasants Failed the Course

By MIMI SHERATON
"When do we put the truffles in the chocolate truffles?" asked Arthur Schlobohm, a stockbroker turned student chef.
"My God! I put my truffles along the backbone of this pheasant instead of on the breasts," said Arthur Fried Jr., another stockbroker cooking for the occasion. "How can I turn them around?" he asked, holding the truffles between two fingers and trying to spin the bird around them.

Gothic mansion formerly belonging to the Singer sewing machine family and now the Explorers Club at 48 East 70th Street, borrowed for the event.
When it was announced that Richard Grausman, the only authorized representative of France's Cordon Bleu cooking school in this country, would donate a two-day class to the highest bidder in Channel 13's fund-raising auction last June, six stockbrokers, all loyal followers of Mr. Grausman's courses at Gimbel's, decided they would "buy him." This they accomplished with a winning bid of $717.

Mr. Grausman, assisted by his wife, Susan, was on hand to demonstrate each step and direct class members as they proceeded on their own. By noon on Saturday, all equipment had been unpacked, along with the $260 worth of food purchased for the occasion.
The menu was agreed on by all and adjusted by Mr. Grausman. He intended to give a lesson, not only in organizing and preparing a meal that would be delicious, but also one that a host or hostess could cook up in advance without being completely done in by the time the guests arrived.

By 3 in the afternoon, and with only 20 minutes out for a lunch of omelettes, the kitchen was ready with the perfumes of simmering fish fumet and the enticing scents of caramelizing sugar and melting chocolate.
Eight fresh-killed pheasants, ordered from Piccinini Bros. on Ninth Avenue, were being trimmed of their glistening, golden fat, then barded with waxy, pink slabs of lard and retracted, ready to be roasted in a big black iron pan, on a bed of carrots, onions and their own giblets.

phoasants waited on a platter, slipped into the oven for reheat.
By 6:15 all were gathered in a paneled library, where a big fire led in the hearth and preliminary raised with glasses of impeccable Dom Perignon '69 cheese straws were pronounced "slightly" burned.
Seated later at the table in the stairs reception room with linens and candlelight, the 14 began on the first course. It was seafood that the participant spooned into patty shells only before, after heating the filling in a shimmering bain-marie, a la French food-warming pan water.

A Culinary Disaster
The wines served with dinner from Albert Fried's own cellar the seafood came the clear, Montrachet Marquis de Laqueu, while magnums of Grand Et de said to be '66 though no date a on the label, accompanied the p.
But oh, the pheasants! All tough they could barely be pie forks or cut with knives.
"Raising would have been Mr. Grausman acknowledged.
"It certainly couldn't have worse," an unidentified participant.

Greek Women: Equality No, but a Place in the Sun

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

ATHENS—If a Greek man is asked to describe his family, he might say something like, "I have three children and one girl."

This expression reflects a traditional attitude in Greek culture—that women are second-class citizens whose main function is to serve men. As an Athens daily newspaper, Ta Nea, said recently, "In Greece women differ only slightly from slaves, and this is due to the lack of courage in men."

Today, that imbalance is starting to shift. New legislation is now being drafted that will eliminate sex discrimination and make women legal equals. The government announced recently that it would conscript women into the military in times of national need.

A Difficult Transition

The legislation follows significant social and economic changes that are already taking place. More women are getting an education and taking jobs outside the home, and one of Europe's strongest bastions of male supremacy is increasingly threatened.

Greece's transition from a backward Balkan nation to a modern member of Europe is a difficult and painful process.

More importantly, Greece is still a relatively poor place that offers limited opportunity for advancement, and men fear and resent the growing competition from women. When the telephone company announced examinations this month for 114 jobs, more than 10,000 persons took the test.

In the past, Greek law made the man head of the household. This gave him unquestioned authority to decide where the family lived, how it spent its money, even what it named its children.

This legal position has been reinforced by child-rearing practices. "Boys are encouraged to be aggressive, and girls are encouraged to be quiet," noted Anne Mangrioli, an economist and mother of two. "Boys are trained for a role in the world and girls for a role in the home." As a result, 60 percent of Greece's school dropouts and 80 percent of its illiterates are women.

Last year, Greece adopted a new constitution that gave men and women "equal rights and obligations." The charter allowed Parliament seven years to implement this clause, and a little stir at the time, but its implications are now starting to be felt.

According to Prof. Andreas who heads a commission to draft legislation, men will now be responsible for helping with home and child care, particularly wives are out working. At the same time, women will be responsible for contributing to the family's support, although housework considered part of that contribution, the professor explained.

The new constitution also will laws that discriminate on questions of work, pay and pensions. For the minimum wage for women—less than for men, and studies show women average about 57 percent pay earned by men in comparable jobs.

Some economists say, however, if women received equal pay they would seldom find jobs. Employers, they argue, would prefer men, goes the argument, women only to save money.

reort that Greek employers are disabused of the "old husband" that women work less efficiently leave jobs more frequently.

More Women in Universities

This year, women account about half the entering class in universities, while 15 years ago were only one quarter. The enrollment has grown dramatically in the same period, and women are earning more money, learning more of the world, and gaining more independence.

Many feminists feel that equality and male good will solve part of the problem. The next step is to create the institutions and programs that make it possible for women to combine family and career.

But most Greek families cannot afford large apartments, day care or private schools. Abortion and contraception are widely available, but Greece has an extremely low birth rate, particularly among better educated dwellers.

"This is a general problem of the whole Western world, not just Greece," said Professor Gaziopoulos. "We are now, in the year 2000, there will be 80 million Turks and 12 million Greeks."

Buyers Log Complaint Over Artificial Firewood

By IRVING MOLOTSKY

One might have thought that when it came to fuel for fireplaces, the tree could not have been improved upon. Logs from hardwood trees burn brightly, give off a certain amount of heat, provide pleasing aromas and colors and come from a renewable resource—the forests.

However, some ersatz logs have been making inroads on the market, and with the weather turning colder and people thinking again about their fireplaces, several inquiries have been received about the artificial logs. Do they clog chimneys? one asked. Do they explode? Are they a fire hazard?

One of those who says he has heard complaints about clogged fireplaces is Sam Brusca, who runs Brusca Ice & Wood at 1697 Third Avenue. “A lot of people have complained,” Mr. Brusca said. “I think it contains too much oil.”

Mr. Brusca sells two brands of the artificial logs, Golden Flame and Duraflame, both at $7.50 for a case of six, which comes out to $1.25 each.

What Mr. Brusca says he has heard was contested by Ronald B. Long, a spokesman for Duraflame, which has about 50 percent of the artificial fire-logs market.

“We have heard these comments in the past and have not been able to confirm a single case of a fireplace clogging up,” Mr. Long said. “To the contrary, a Duraflame log puts off fewer carbon particles than a normal wood fire. The paraffin in the compressed log completely burns up.”

Why, then, such comments from homeowners? Mr. Long was asked.

“What might be happening is the failure of people to properly maintain their chimneys,” he replied. “There’s not too many chimney sweeps around any more.”

Sort of a latter-day chimney sweep is Richard Bruno, a chimney consultant at 1204 Lexington Avenue, whose concern cares for many fireplaces in Manhattan and in Westchester County.

Mr. Bruno says he has not seen any fireplace chimneys that had been clogged by using artificial logs. He added, however, “I do not recommend compressed logs because I have heard of two explosions in Westchester County (in fireplaces in which they were used), and because they burn with a fine, oily soot that is not good for the air around us and the apartment itself.”

Mr. Long said that he had never heard of any instance in which explosions of compressed logs had occurred.

Mr. Bruno's position was supported by Frank Iovino, president of Consolidated Charcoal in Brooklyn, who says he has been selling the compressed logs for six or seven years.

“There’s a theory—I don’t know how much truth there is to it—that the burned wax after a while will coat the flue,” Mr. Iovino said. “I don’t know; I can’t believe that enough would build up to block the flue.”

The wax that Mr. Iovino mentioned is the paraffin that is used to bind together the wood shavings that are compressed into the artificial logs. Mr. Long said that Duraflame was based on an earlier product that had been developed in the Middle West but did not reach a wide market.

In 1969, Mr. Long said, Duraflame's developers reasoned that they could put together the logs, using the sawdust and wood chips that were the waste product of a pencil factory in Stockton, Calif. Duraflame logs, he said, contain only wood waste, paraffin and some chemical salts to provide color in the flame.

Mr. Long said that a Duraflame log, which is intended to sell for 99 cents to $1.09 in a typical supermarket, gives off heat amounting to 80,000 B.T.U.'s, which has led the Fireplace Institute to recommend that such logs not be used in ceramic fireplaces.

Instead, the institute recommended that people wanting to use the compressed logs purchase logs designed to burn for two hours, instead of the usual three.

Mr. Long said that he had not heard of any problems with ceramic fireplaces, but he did say that the regular three-hour Duraflame log should not be used in sheet-metal fireplaces. “It might destroy the finish,” he said, “and it could get so hot that it could set adjacent things on fire—although I have not heard of this actually happening.”

Mr. Bruno, who said he did not recommend the compressed logs, was asked what he would recommend. “Use ash, which is good for starting fires, plus a mixture of hickory, white oak, cherry, apple and white birch,” he suggested, and he had these other recommendations:

“Use hardwood that has been seasoned at least all summer, except for ash, which can be used just two weeks after it’s cut down.”

“Make sure your fireplace has a damper, and use it, otherwise you’ll have a tremendous heat loss. More than half of the heat in New York City don't have a screen should always be completely fireproof glass or increase the heat in a room, people—like me—find them very terrible.”

Sears' 'Bait and Switch' Is Described by Wit
By DIANE HENRY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2—In a before the Federal Trade Commission that led to the recent case agreed to by Sears, Roebuck & Co., witnesses described how the “switch” tactics were used to get customers to buy items more than the ones they had planned.

Advertised sale items are stored in sufficient quantity to meet the demand, and even when it was common practice, the salesman testified, to tell a customer that a sale item was not in stock, a customer insisted on the advertised item.

John S. Gill, a retired sales clerk who worked for Sears in Florio, said about a number of items sold.

Speaking of television sets, the advertised sale item was a 20-inch set. When the saleswoman told him it was not in stock, Gill said, “I said, ‘If you don’t have it, I won’t buy it.’”

When he was asked why he had bought a different set, Gill said, “I was trying to figure out how to cancel it. I called the customer and he told me he was still in stock. I know when it came in, I mean when one of the better units came in and we’d demonstrated it.”

It wound up I sold her machine,” he concluded.

After Mr. Gill retired, he said he had bought a washing machine. When it didn't work, a Sears repairman told him it was a washing machine, not a washer because cheap washers were made.

Later, Mr. Gill said, after he was persuaded to buy a more expensive model, he learned that the bolts had not been removed from the first machine, and that “this was purposely so the sale machine would not work properly.”

Joseph Peaslee, a former Sears salesman in the Washington area, said he once saw his supervisor “a big rubber mallet like they use on the side of a washing machine” on display as an inexpensive model. He explained that the supervisor had the machine “so we’d have the customers. This is the one we have left... you’ll have it as it is.”

James E. Moore, a former salesman in Colorado, was asked how he used those sales techniques trained others to use them. He knew that Sears had a specific against using such tactics.

He replied, “It’s one thing to say and one thing to do. When you are on the firing line and you are fired for selling a low-end job (expensive sale item) or you are fired, so to speak—that policy hold. It’s just not possible to have nice kinds of things when your pends on it, you need to feed a which history will show are vital and necessary for the progress of our country and the prosperity of our people," said Law Minister H.R. Gokhale in the ornate, high-ceilinged chamber this afternoon, just before the vote. "The most important thing we are doing is putting beyond doubt the supremacy of Parliament, in unequivocal terms."

India's Parliament Votes Measures Increasing Powers of Mrs. Gandhi

Prime Minister Gandhi, who gains the most from the legislation, sat impassive in her front-row seat through the closing moments of the debate, then smiled when the rows of Congress Party members behind her greeted the final vote with vigorous desk-thumping, the traditional form of applause.

The bill must still be passed by the more ceremonial upper house and by a majority of the state legislatures, and signed by President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, but no obstacle is expected anywhere along the line. Its passage in the lower house, the chamber with political significance, was never in doubt either, since the Congress Party controls more than two-thirds of the seats, even when everyone is present.

Most of the opposition members have been boycotting ever since the bill was introduced early in September, protesting censorship of news accounts of the proceedings, and the continued impasment of more than two dozen members of Parliament.

The set of constitutional amendments is regarded by both the Government and its opponents as momentous, among the most important legislative actions since June of last year, when Mrs. Gandhi declared a state of emergency, in the face of what she said was a grave threat of subversion. The Government contends that the constitutional changes are necessary to achieve "socio-economic revolution," aiding in the war against poverty, ignorance and disease.

Bill Called Vital Step

Taking part in the debate last week, Prime Minister Gandhi declared: "This bill is a vital step in curing our political system of some of its ills. Those who want to fix the Constitution in a rigid and unalterable frame are entirely out of tune with the spirit of new India."

On the opposition side of the house, most of the seats remained empty. But the general opinion of that side was expressed by P.G. Mavalankar, an independent member from the state of Gujarat, who rose a couple of hours before the vote today to tell his colleagues across the floor that they were "opening the floodgate to regimentation and dictatorship."

"Although you are in a strong majority, you are not sustained by morality," he declared. "God will not forgive the sin ... are about to commit."

Jersey Court Approves Cut In Some Medicaid Fees by 10%

TRENTON, Nov. 2 (UPI)—An appeals court has ruled that the State Department of Institutions is authorized to balance its budget by reducing certain Medicaid fees by 10 percent.

The Appellate Division of Superior Court said Monday that it had found no merit in any of the arguments against the reduction raised by the New Jersey Federation of Physicians and Dentists. The federation filed suit against Commissioner Ann Klein after she issued a directive in July 1975 cutting back Medicaid fees by 10 percent to offset a projected budget deficit.

The appeals court noted that the federation's warnings about physicians' abandoning Medicaid cases "were largely expressions of fears which were neither statistically supported nor otherwise documented."

Smuggling of Cattle Semen Called Threat to Livestock Industry

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 (AP)—Smuggling of cattle semen from countries where foot and mouth disease is prevalent is a potential threat to the United States livestock industry, the Agriculture Department said today.

The warning was raised by the department's Foreign Animal Disease Advisory Committee, which said that currently depressed cattle prices were an incentive to semen smuggling.

Cattle semen used to breed American cows can be imported legally but buyers must pay for expensive testing to insure that it is free of foot and mouth disease viruses.

With United States cattle prices down, officials said there was a larger incentive to smuggle the semen into the country to avoid testing expenses.

American Comes Home From Saigon After Years of Helping the Street Urchins The

By RALPH BLUMENTHAL

He went to Vietnam at the height of the war, one American among half a million, a 25-year-old Bostonian, an actor and conscientious objector determined to help suffering civilians.

He left more than eight years later, a Vietnam folk hero, the last known American to come home from Saigon, an American who had lived nearly 16 months under the Communist Government.

"The more I think about it, the wilder it seems," said Richard Hughes. Vietnam is both far away and strangely present these days as the lanky long-time volunteer, now 33 years old, works in a midtown office building, packing the files of his Shoeshine Boys Foundation, a virtual one-man charity that provided hundreds of South Vietnamese street urchins with the only home they ever knew.

Dust and Clogged Quarters

There is dust on the cartons and papers clogging the closet-size office. The shoeshine boys gaze wide-eyed from blown-up photographs lining the narrow walls.

"I guess half of them must be dead now," Mr. Hughes said. Many, he explained, were drafted into the South Vietnamese Army in the final days of the war; others disappeared.

But the survivors are in good hands, he believes, so he can close the foundation and look forward to the first personal peace he has known since 1968.

"I've been preparing for this a long time," he said the other day in an interview. "It's a happy ending. The kids'll be fine. There's nothing to be disappointed about. I feel very much at peace with myself."

Mr. Hughes, six feet tall and boyishly handsome, with deep-set blue eyes and a flashy grin, has an unusual perspective on the fate of his former charges: For well over a year after the victorious North Vietnamese and guerrilla forces marched into Saigon—from April 30, 1975, until Aug. 7, 1976—he

The New York Times/Robert Walker

Richard Hughes closing up his South Vietnamese Shoeshine Boys Foundation remained in the city, mingling freely, he said, with civilians and soldiers alike.

He and North Vietnamese soldiers who moved into his Saigon building became friends, he related. They exchanged visits to watch old American television films of the war and compare notes.

A colonel and two other soldiers of what was long known to foreigners as the Vietcong jokingly crashed his Christmas dinner last year. Other former guerrilla troops practiced headstands on his office carpet and posed for his snapshots, Mr. Hughes said. "Never in 16 months was there anybody who did anything hostile physically to me or even said anything hostile," he reported, nor did he see any signs of retaliation against former officials and officers of the ousted American-backed Government of President Nguyen Van Thieu.

When he left in August, he said, it was out of a feeling that "the Vietnamese should now be together to solve their problems as a family." He added: "I was ready to leave. It was time to leave."

Reports on Other Americans

He was the last known American to come home from Saigon. Since then, according to the State Department, another civilian, listed only as Arlo H. Gay, left Sept. 21 and was seen in Bangkok.

Still another American, Tucker Guggelman, identified by the department as a former United States Army civilian employee, is in custody possibly in Hanoi, charged by the Vietnamese with working for the Central Intelligence Agency. There are reports, the department added, that another American, identified as Teresa N. Reed, a religious volunteer, is still in Vietnam, but there has been no confirmation.

Dick Hughes hadn't planned it that way when, as a conscientious objector acting and teaching drama at Boston University in April 1968, he made "a quick, emotional decision" to go to Vietnam as a civilian volunteer.

Arriving in Saigon with about $400 in borrowed funds and a single change of clothes, he was amazed and saddened by the ragtag army of urchins whose home, it seemed, was the streets.

Invited the Youngsters In

When he rented a large ground-floor apartment, he invited the youngsters to share it. Soon 11 shoeshine boys had moved in, drawn by the American's easy companionship, the shelter's protection from the police and the occasional meals.

There were no house rules, which enhanced its popularity. "I had no concepts," Mr. Hughes recalled. "There was no reputation at stake here. It wasn't a 'project.'"

By the end of 1968 the population of the makeshift shelter had grown to 50 of the boys the Vietnamese called but dot—just of life. Mr. Hughes expanded. He took on Vietnamese students to help, and he set up four other shelters in Saigon and two in Danang. Eventually up to 1,500 boys passed through the hostels over the year.

Meanwhile, Mr. Hughes, who had with him a letter from Boston University identifying him as a correspondent for the campus newspaper, joined with three friends, Mike Morrow, Dan Derby and Emerson Manawis, in founding the Dispatch News Service. The small news agency, which Mr. Hughes had little time for, broke the story of the My Lai massacre.

Vietnamese Ran the Operation

In 1970 he Vietnamized the operation, turning its daily administration over to volunteers while he concentrated on funds. Making his first trip back home, he set up the Shoeshine Boys Foundation in a series of donated offices staffed by an actress friend, Pam Blazer Lack.

"Unfortunately," he said, "by the time we really got going, nobody wanted to hear about Vietnam any more."

Long before the collapse of the Thieu Government, Mr. Hughes went on, he had decided that there was no reason to flee Saigon with the other Americans. "We hadn't done anything wrong," he said. "We had nothing to be afraid about."

On May 2, two days after Saigon's fall, two green-uniformed North Vietnamese officers and two guerrilla guards paid a visit.

"They sat down and we sat down," related Mr. Hughes, who speaks Vietnamese. "They asked for our papers and we handed them over. They asked what we were doing there. We explained this was a social-welfare program to help homeless children."

"One said: 'We want to thank you for your work. It was an important thing in time of war, and we will carry on your work.'" who had been moved into their apartments in the same building appearing, drawn by reports of Americans.

"They were chatty," he said. "They took off their sandals and with their feet up on the couch, I about how long they had been in the army and how long they had been working in Saigon."

The only hint of resentment, he said, when a North Vietnamese officer held out a fist with small over the knuckles, identified as with a period of the war: "Tom Johnson, Nixon."

Other witnesses have given a favorable view of events under the communists. Tiziano Terzani, an Italian journalist who wrote a book on a takeover, reported in April this year that the new regime was "worse in terms of food, in of commodities, in terms of cost than during the war. In August, reported serious food shortages; said many former Saigon residents been forced to work in the fields."

However, there is widespread resentment that there has been no line directed against former anti-Communists.

Mr. Hughes, describing the life of the new Government, said it was phasing out the shelters, and some of the youngsters with their lives and sending others to the city for schooling or vocational training.

"My work was over," he said applied for an exit visa.

Ajusting—Well, Somewhat. Mr. Hughes, who still dresses as he wore in Vietnam—open sea dark slacks, a white shirt and a tan bare pullover—has taken an apartment with a river view in Spuyten in the Bronx while he figures out to do next. He says he is slowly adjusting to new life—although he jumps one day when letters shot past down an office mail chute.

With a Metropolitan Savings Bank Individual Retirement Account

If you qualify but haven't started an IRA Account—act now, before the December 31st deadline, and claim the deduction on your 1976 tax returns.

Here's How the Plan Works. The IRS allows you to contribute up to 15% of your annual income, up to a maximum of $1,500. The money you save and the interest it earns are free from taxes until you actually retire. Then, possibly, you could be in a lower tax bracket.

If you and your spouse both qualify, you can open separate plans and double the savings, and your total tax reduction!

A Plan for the Self-Employed, too. It's good business to establish your Self-Employed (Keogh) Retirement Plan, and take the sting out of this year's tax bite! People who've tried the Perdue 'Oven Stuffer' Roaster tell us it's simply the tenderest, most succulent tasting bird they've ever tasted.

Unfortunately, a lot of people haven't been able to taste it. Because ever since we introduced these 5 to 7 lb. beauties, the demand has been exceeding the supply.

Now we're cutting some 'Oven Stuffer' Roasters in half. So there'll be a lot more to go around.

The half is every bit as delicious as the whole 'Oven Stuffer.' And it's 100% better than none.

DILL STUFFING*

1/2 cup butter or margarine	5 cups day-old white bread cubes	1/2 teaspoon salt, dash pepper, water
1/2 cup chopped celery	1/2 teaspoon dill weed crushed	2 teaspoons chicken seasoned stockbase
1/2 cup chopped onion

To make dill stuffing: In large saucepan, melt 1/2 cup butter. Add celery and onion; saute over medium heat, stirring occasionally until tender, about 5 minutes. Remove from heat; stir in bread cubes, dill weed, salt and pepper. In a small saucepan, heat 1/2 cup water to boiling point. Stir in chicken seasoned stockbase until dissolved. Pour over bread mixture and toss until well mixed.

*If you're cooking half an 'Oven Stuffer' roaster, use half the ingredients.

WINE TALK

Great Vintage Year in Germany; Top Quality Expected, for a Price

By FRANK J. PRIAL

Special to The New York Times

BERNKASTEL, West Germany—Except on weekends, the summer tourist crush has ended in this storybook little town on the Mosel River. Consequently, few people are yet aware of the extraordinary thing that has happened on the hills that climb dizzily up from Bernkastel's narrow cobblestone streets and tilted medieval buildings. It has been, simply, one of the greatest vintages of the last 100 years.

To understand something of what has happened it is necessary to know a little about German wines. They are rated by sugar content, the sweetest wines being the best. Sunshine, which produces the sugar in the grapes, is therefore a prized commodity in these steep, northern river valleys, and, more than in any other wine region, success is measured in days, even hours, of warm sunlight.

To get as much of the precious warmth of the sun as possible, German vintners leave their grapes on the vines far into autumn. Some vintages have not been picked fully until December. Kabinett and Spätlese Wines

The bulk of German wine goes, as it does in most wine countries, into table wine for domestic consumption. Kabinett wines, with higher sugar concentrations, are the first level to qualify for export. Next come the spätlese wines—deeper, richer, with still more sugar.

Then there are auslese wines, made not from bunches but from separate grapes selected for their richness in sugar. Beerenauslese wines come from grapes that have been attacked by botrytis cinerea, a mold known as the noble rot in English, pourriture noble in French and edelfäule in Germany. The mold eats through the grapeskin, releases water in the fruit and leaves only concentrated juice.

At the top of this wineyard geography is the trockenbeerenauslese, a special wine produced on rare years where minute quantities of grapes achieve phenomenal levels of sugar content. The wine is complex and heavy, and possesses a bouquet that fills a room when a bottle is opened. A price of $60 a bottle is not unusual.

The quality of the 1976 vintage is so high that some vintners have more trockenbeerenauslese than they do Kabinett wine.

May Downgrade Designations "I don't think we are going to make anything lower than auslese," said Karl Heinz Lauerberg, leading producer here and one of three owners of Germany's most famous vineyard, the here and one of three owners of Gerberg, like other premium-wine producers, may downgrade the designation of some of his wine, selling beerenauslese as auslese and auslese as spätlese.

At Schloss Schonborn, one of the famous wineries of the Rheingau, the quality of the grape must—the unfermented juice—last week was unprecedented. The quantity of sugar is a measurement of specific gravity and is called the oechsle rating.

According to Government figures, the highest oechsle ratings for the 1911 vintage, a legendary one, were 99.5. In 1921 they reached 105.4. At Schloss Schonborn in Hattenheim, on the Rhine, last week they reached 168 in one vineyard and 175 in another.

The minimum oechsle grade for auslese in the Rheingau, the region where Schloss Schonborn is situated, is 85. This year, according to the estate manager, Robert Engler, nothing less than 110 oechsle will be used. The minimum for trockenbeerenauslese in the Rheingau is 150 oechsle; Schloss Schonborn brought in grapes from the Erbacher Marockbrunn vineyard, of which it owns a part, at 186.

Rhine Quantity Declines

Quantity is down somewhat in the Rhine and Mosel valleys, but that does not worry the wine producers. They are more concerned with selling the high quality wines they are producing.

"Ordinarily, we would sell our highest quality wines at premium prices," one Rheingau vintner said, "but with everyone making these extraordinary wines, the shippers are going to hit us with low prices."

"Anyone who has the money to finance his crop and the space to store his own wines can hold on to these 1976's. In a few years they will make his fortune. But most of us will have to sell and it will be the shippers who will make the profits on these extraordinary wines."

Mr. Lanerberg said, "We could live 10 years on this crop if we had the space and the money."

Actually, the excitement over the current vintage is no guarantee that the wines will live up to their expectations. Many things can happen between the picking and the drinking. One problem is always the balance between sugar and acid. High sugar content with low acid means a flabby, soft wine. Balance is everything. In the Rheinhessen, the wine region south of Mainz, the sugar contents are equally high, but the acid levels are low. The low-acid wines will have the beautiful natural sweetness expected of German wines, but they will lack the character of the more elegant wines of the Rheingau, where the acid content is high. As a rule, units of acidity in German wine should amount to a tenth of the sugar density; 70 oechsle should have at least 7.0 acidity.

One 1976 Lauerberg wine, an auslese from the Badstube vineyard, had an oechsle grade of over 110 and an acidity of about 10.0, an excellent balance. But a number of wines in the Rheinhessen have been showing an acidity of 5.6 or lower recently.

German law does not require that a label show the sugar and acid content of a wine, so it is a good idea to stick to famous names from the Rheingau

There are, alas, dozens of them. A good wine merchant can help; finding a good wine merchant is another problem.

Excellently Balanced Auslese

The unusual 1976 vintage in Germany comes right after the 1975 vintage, which was extremely good. The best of the 1975's, from the best vineyards of the Mosel and from the Rheingau, will not be released for six months more or so. But many of the lesser wines already are reaching the market, here in Germany and in the United States.

They are beautifully balanced wines with great style. That is, they have excellent color and bouquet without being cloyingly sweet on one hand, or as sharp and stony on the other. The wines that will improve with age—the Kabinett wines—can use another year in the bottle—but can be drunk and enjoyed.

The 1975 German wines are of balanced, fruity, correct for light and as aperitifs, except of course the very highest quality wines, will be available to only a few people in any event.

The 1976's are something different. It is as if General Motors, in an advertisement in newspapers row to announce that in 1977 Cadillacs will be built and sold. Cadillac does not necessarily mean expensive Cadillacs.

From the great châteaux districts of Bordeaux, three remarkable wines from Cartier.

The Bordeaux region of France has been turning out some of the finest wines in the world ever since the Romans.

Most Bordeaux wines are made in small, individually owned vineyards, or châteaux.

Of those châteaux officially cited as outstanding over the years, 85 percent are located in just three districts—Médoc, Graves and St-Émilion.

All three are unique in soil and climate conditions. Conditions that result in consistently superior wines.

The wines from all three are distinctive, all three are superb.

The Cartier District Wines.

There's Cartier Médoc. A medium bodied, yet delicate red wine, made primarily from the prestigious Cabernet grape.

Cartier Graves is a crisp, dry, white wine, made from Sauvignon and Semillon grapes.

Remarkable wines from the three most outstanding districts of Bordeaux. Remarkably priced at, about $3 a bottle. Try Cartier.

Consumers Urged to Buy Chicken, as Its Cost Drops to Two-Year Low

By WERNER BAMBERGER
Elinor Guggenheimer, the City's Consumer Affairs Commissioner, yesterday advised New York housewives to go back to the good old days of Herbert Hoover and have "two chickens in every pot."

Chicken prices last week, she said, dropped from 60 cents to 55 cents a pound, "the lowest price we've recorded for chicken in two years."

As for the overall cost of feeding a family of four, Mrs. Guggenheimer found that the price of the 41-item market basket went up last week by 0.8 percent from $70.50 to $71.10.

One of the reasons for the increase, she said, was the end of special sales on beef and pork. Sirloin steak went up 4 cents to $1.82 a pound, bottom round was up 4 cents to $1.72 and center-cut pork rose by 12 cents to $1.82 a pound.

In view of the current high cost of California iceberg lettuce, the result of adverse weather conditions and smaller acreage under cultivation, the department undertook a check of other basic salad ingredients and compared their prices and nutritional benefits.

Iceberg lettuce, which has no significant nutritional value, checked out at 46 cents a pound. Of the other four salad ingredients escarole was 42 cents a pound and cabbage 24 cents a pound. Escarole was cited as a significant source of Vitamin A and cabbage a significant source of Vitamin C.

Romaine, also rich in Vitamin A, was 54 cents a pound, and spinach, a significant source of iron, riboflavin, and Vitamins A and C, cost 74 cents a pound.

Continental Airline Pilots Plan To Start Talks in 10-Day Strike

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 1 (AP)—Spokesmen for pilots striking Continental Airlines said today that union officials would talk to the company by the end of the week in the 10-day-old bargaining stalemate.

Gary Thomas, head of the council of 12 elected pilots that holds the power to ratify contracts, said he hoped that such preliminary talks this week would get official negotiations under way again. The pilots said that they had received a telegram from the company telling them that officials would negotiate if a mediator determined that they had reduced their demands "substantially."

The strike began Oct. 23, halting service to 31 cities. The pilots say that their salaries are 20 percent below those paid by other airlines and that they are required to work more hours.

Judge Wants to Try Cocaine To Settle Drug Case Before Him

BOSTON, Nov. 2 (UPI)—A judge presiding over a cocaine possession trial says he wants to take the drug, under medical supervision, to determine if it is as harmful as Massachusetts law says.

Judge Edward McKenney of Roxbury District Court said yesterday that he wanted to try cocaine under controlled conditions because the prosecution had not presented evidence convincing him that it was addictive.

The defense in the case is challenging the constitutionality of the state's 65-year anti-cocaine law. "My wanting to do this is similar to a judge visiting the scene of a crime or viewing a movie to determine if it is obscene," Judge McKenney said.

of the Superb CARRUADES DE CHATEAU LAFITE-ROTHSCHILD

ORDER NOW—we will deliver mid-December The Ideal Christmas Gift to the Wine Lover

WHAT IS CARRUADES DE CHATEAU LAFITE-ROTHSCHILD? At Chateau Lafite-Rothschild, the world's greatest red wine vineyard, they follow the practice of labeling the wines grown from vines older than twelve years—CHATEAU LAFITE-ROTHSCHILD.

CHATEAU LAFITE-ROTHSCHILD. The grape varieties, soil and viniculture are identical. In blind tastings it is difficult to distinguish between the two. The differentiating characteristics are that the Carruares is a bit lighter and matures somewhat more quickly.

We quote Cyril Ray from his book, Lafite: "The Carruares is made from the same grapes as the Lafite itself, in the same proportions, grown in the same vignoble, made by the same men, in the same way, and under the same roof. Like Lafite, it is entitled to the appellation 'Pauillac.' The only difference between the Carruares and Lafite is that the Carruares is made only from those vines on the property that are not yet twelve years old, the Lafite from twelve-year-olds and older."

1967 was the last vintage at Lafite that was bottled under the Carruares label. Those listed here are therefore collector's items. They are available in limited quantity and are irreplaceable.

ater: Stringing Along With 'Lines of Vision'

Richard Foreman Work... Foreman Touch

By MEL GUSSOW... playwrights often act as they are not usually the best of their own work.

As he also proved at Lincoln Center with "Threepenny Opera," Mr. Foreman is equally adept at impressing his theatrical sensibility on the works of others.

Mr. Kornfeld can be an inventive director, just as Maria Irene Fornes (the lyricist for "Lines of Vision") can be a capable playwright. Each has had great success—in the case of "Promenade" it was a shared success—with Al Carmines, with his zesty exuberance and word-playfulness.

A distinguishing trademark of his plays is string. He uses string to define stage space, to determine point of view (string becomes an arrow aiming at a target), and to indicate relationships (actors attached to objects).

The Cast

cradles entwining performers, threaded with music by George Quinry. My notes in the dark include such comments as "rope from nose of cutout to grocery boxes."

A little of this is entertaining (particularly the dancing), but much of it is humorless and enervating. "Lines of Vision" seems less a collaboration than an appliqué.

PIANIST WITH STAN GETZ IS A 'CHALLENGE' TO HIM

Personal Finance: Profits on Life Insurance Cash

By RICHARD PHALON

Many more individuals are borrowing against the cash value of their life insurance policies in what is apparently often a sophisticated effort to turn a profit on interest spreads.

In the year ended last Aug. 30, according to the American Council of Life Insurance, industrywide borrowings against insurance cash values rose to a record $25.4 billion, up $1.4 billion from a year earlier.

The rate of increase, according to Walter Cohen, an assistant bureau chief for the New York Insurance Department, was "probably considerably higher in New York" because the state has held the rate of interest companies can charge on cash value loans to a 5 percent maximum.

Since the return on many safe and liquid investments is higher than the interest that has to be paid on insurance policies in New York—three-year Treasury notes, for example, are yielding around 6.25 percent—borrowing has proved attractive to many people.

"There is a group of sophisticated people who understand money and they borrow any time they see they can make a profit on interest rates," said Robert Rachlin, chairman of the Compensation Planning Corporation.

"I don't like to borrow and I see some dangers if people take money out of their life insurance policies and speculate with it," one regulatory official said. "But on the other hand, you can put it in a savings bank insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for four years and get a guaranteed return of 7.75 percent."

The life industry began to get hit particularly hard in 1974 when interest rates on such low-risk investments as Treasuries and Government agency bonds shot to as much as 9 percent.

The cash drain—also felt by savings banks and other thrift institutions—was heavy. Borrowings on life policies jumped from 8 percent to 8.7 percent of the life industry's assets.

That figure has now eased off to 8.2 percent of assets, partly because interest rates have declined and partly because the industry was successful in persuading many Legislatures to take the profit out of the move.

Some 34 states have now raised the interest rate on insurance borrowings from the old 5 percent to 6 percent and in many cases to 8 percent a year.

New Jersey went to 8 percent in late 1974. Connecticut followed early last year, leaving New York in the minority of states holding the line at 5 percent.

The annual rate, in New York, according to Mr. Cohen of the State Insurance Department, is actually 4.8 percent if the interest is paid in advance. The rate goes to the full 5 percent if the interest is paid at the end of the year.

Most permanent (nonterm) insurance contracts allow a holder to borrow up to the full cash surrender value of his policy. The demand for such loans tends to vary not only with interest rates but also with general economic conditions.

In 1935, for example, in the depths of the Depression, cash value borrowings climbed to a record 15.2 percent of life insurance company assets.

Thus, some of the borrowings now may reflect real economic need rather than an interest-rate play.

Some of the loans may also reflect the growth in popularity of a particular type of coverage—finance insurance—in which cash values are borrowed to pay off the premiums.

Are there dangers in borrowing against a life policy? The companies dislike it because low rates such as New York State's 5 percent cut into their earning power.

There might also be some disadvantages from the individual's point of view. According to Mr. Rachlin, a chartered life underwriter, money borrowed against a policy does not qualify for the tax exclusion that applies if the full face amount is paid to a beneficiary.

The numbers suggest, however, that some of the caution of the 1950's and 1960's has gone out the window in policyholders' search for the highest yields they can find.

Pound Stronger Against Dollar; Gold Ends Mixed

LONDON, Nov. 2 (AP)—Europe's two weakest currencies went opposite ways today, the British pound strengthening and the Italian lira declining against the dollar.

The dollar, meanwhile, gained ground against the Swiss franc and the Dutch guilder but declined against the West German mark, while the price of gold declined in Zurich and marked time in London.

bullion center, it remained steady at $122.625.

I.M.F. Talks Scheduled

Dealers said one reason was that talks with International Monetary Fund experts on Britain's $3.68 billion loan application got under way in earnest this week. They said another factor was speculation that the British Government this week will announce new measures to stimulate industry.

In Milan, where markets were shut yesterday for All Saints Day, the dollar closed today at 865.80 lire, against 863.90 Friday.

Dealers said that despite Italy's current 7 percent tax on most foreign currency purchases there was unexpected heavy demand for dollars. This forced the Bank of Italy to intervene to support the lira.

The dollar closed higher in Zurich at 2.4372 Swiss francs against 2.4356 yesterday and in Amsterdam at 2.5195 Dutch guilders against 2.5130. But in Frankfurt the dollar declined, closing at 2.4800 West German marks against 2.4900. Markets in Paris remained closed for All Saints Day today.

Britain's Monetary Reserves Fall

LONDON, Nov. 2 (Reuters)—Britain's monetary reserves fell by $485 million during October to $4.703 billion, the lowest level since July 1971, the Treasury said today.

In September, bolstered by foreign borrowing, the reserves had risen by $200 million.

But in October, despite sharp falls in the pound, there were no more drawings on the $5.3 billion credit set up last year by 10 leading industrial nations to help Britain stabilize its currency, the Treasury said.

E.E.C. AGREES TO PAY ITALY'S BRITISH DEBT

BRUSSELS, Nov. 2 (Reuters)—The European Common Market Monetary Committee agreed in principle today that other E.E.C. countries would take over Italy's $486 million debt to Britain, due to be repaid by Dec. 9, informed sources said today.

The formal decision was expected to be made by E.E.C. finance ministers when they meet here Monday.

The sources said some community members might opt out of the arrangement, but there would be enough participants to take over the whole debt.

Britain told Italy last month that it wanted the money—part of an E.E.C. aid package to Italy—returned to help repay part of its own $5.3 billion international standby credit, which falls due on Dec. 9.

Finding of $570,000 More Lifts Inmont Payments to $7.57 Million

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2—The Inmont Corporation's investigation into questionable corporate payments has uncovered an additional $570,000, raising the previously disclosed figure to $7.57 million, according to a document made available today at the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Inmont, a maker of inks, coatings and chemical specialty products, reported in August that foreign subsidiaries had made questionable payments from 1971 to date of about $7 million. It did not identify the nations involved.

Meanwhile, A-T-O Inc., a diversified company that makes fire protection and fluid control products, among other things, revised its earlier estimate of $1 million in payments to obtain foreign sales, cutting it by $250,000. However, it said it had also found $400,000 of questionable accommodation payments.

Business Optimism in Britain Falls; Manufacturing Recovery Continues

LONDON, Nov. 2 (Reuters)—Business optimism in Britain has fallen sharply but the recovery in manufacturing activity is continuing, an industrial survey showed today.

The survey of 1,789 companies by the Confederation of British Industry, the nation's foremost employers' organization, showed that while more companies had been optimistic than pessimistic in July, there had now been a turnaround.

The gloom was caused by Britain's current credit squeeze in which the minimum lending rate has been put up to 15 percent, by the fall in sterling and by the new increase in inflation.

Monetary Talks Sought by Paris As Top Priority

By FLORA LEWIS Special to The New York Times Paris, Nov. 2—France is looking for serious talks with Washington on international monetary reform early in the next Administration.

Lockheed Ties 28.4% Earnings Dip To Slower Sales of Its Tristar Jet

By ROBERT LINDSEY Special to The New York Times LOS ANGELES, Nov. 2—Reflecting the continuing financial drain of its slow-selling L-1011 Tristar jet airplane, the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation reported today a 19 percent decline in sales and a 28.4 percent decline in earnings for its third quarter ended Sept. 26.

The Minister, who was addressing the Anglo-American Press Association here, carefully avoided any comment on his country's hopes and fears about relations with Washington after the election. But he made it clear that Paris would want to move quickly to tackle pressing economic problems.

Data Resources assumed in its calculations that monetary and fiscal policies would continue as they are now. Most economists, however, say behavior of the economic authorities in Washington toward the OPEC increase would play a major role in determining the nature of the impact on the United States and world economies.

Delivery by Truck Allowed

The major changes in the contract now approved by the agency provide that delivery can be made by truck to the delivery areas, as well as by railroad. There had been some difficulty last spring involving freighter shortages and tieups, because then delivery could be made only by rail.

Technology: Sewage Disinfected By Electron-Beam Bombardment

By VICTOR E. McELHRENY

The disinfection of sewage sludge by bombardment with an electron beam is being tried on a considerable scale at the Deer Island sewage treatment plant in Boston Harbor. Behind the Boston tests, for which the National Science Foundation and state and local agencies have granted more than $600,000 so far, is a growing national problem. More and more cities, under Federal legal pressure, are upgrading their sewage treatment to processes that remove virtually all solids and disease-bearing organisms from waste water—and produce the residue called sludge. The annual output of this wet concentrate is expected to double in the United States by the year 2000. Disposal of the sludge is complicated by the continued presence of disease-bearing bacteria and viruses, and of heavy metals that could accumulate and create health hazards wherever the sludge is deposited. In years ahead, according to policies still being drafted by the Environmental Protection Agency, the heavy metal content will be reduced by controls on large industries putting their waste water into municipal systems. But the problem of disinfection remains, now that sheer dumping of sludge is coming under tighter and tighter restrictions. To incinerate sludge requires costly fuels, although many studies indicate that burning will become the main disposal technique in years ahead. Land area where sludge can be dumped as fill is dwindling. Spreading sludge on farm fields, or on strip-mined land that is being reclaimed, draws opposition in some areas. And the Government has forbidden dumping of sludge in the ocean by East Coast cities after 1980.

Chlorine Treatment Criticized Even the common technique of using chlorine as a disinfectant has its critics. The chlorine supply has tightened while billions of dollars worth of new sewage-treatment facilities are added each year. The manufacture of chlorine uses electric power and its treatment is not a sure killer of viruses. With such problems in mind, scientists and engineers have turned toward radiation as a possible means of disinfection. But here, too, there are limitations. Most radiation sources other than electron beams require heavy, and expensive shielding, and much radioactive material is locked up in "spent" nuclear fuel that is not being reprocessed at the present time pending regulatory decisions.

Nonetheless, a German facility began bombarding sewage sludge with gamma rays in 1973. In 1975, Sandia Laboratories in Albuquerque, N.M., announced a $630,000 grant from the E.P.A. and the Energy Research and Development Administration to experiment on a combined sludge treatment by heat and gamma rays from such radioactive waste products as cesium 137. Last May, following a research program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the University of New Hampshire, the electron-bombardment facility was dedicated at Deer Island. It began testing the disinfection capabilities of various radiation dosages produced by a continuous, and relatively cheap radiation source—and electron-beam generator of the sort used in academic physics research and cancer therapy. The Deer Island facility uses a 50-kilowatt electron generator from the High Voltage Engineering Corporation.

Its beam of electrons sweeps back and forth across a four-foot-wide, two-milimeter-deep stream of sludge—water with 2 to 5 per cent solids in it—that is passing over a metal drum at the rate of more than six feet per second. No part of the moving stream stays in the path of the beam more than one hundredth of a second, according to Dr. John G. Trump, a retired M.I.T. professor, director of high voltage and head of the project. But in that short time, the water receives a radiation dose of 400,000 rads, enough to kill bacteria and destroy viruses—and perhaps to break up traces of some toxic chemicals, 100,000 Gallons Treated. The Deer Island unit can treat 100,000 gallons of sludge a day, about one third the daily output of Deer Island. The Deer Island plant, completed in 1968, is one of the nation's largest, treating 300 million gallons of sewage daily, and has been discharging chlorine-treated sludge into the ocean. According to Dr. Trump, a commercial installation the size of the one being tested at Deer Island would cost about $500,000 to set up, and $130,000 a year to operate.

Power in Reserve Neighborhood banks of storage batteries of advanced design, able to deliver peak-demand power to nearby customers, are looming larger than before in the plans of the nation's electric utilities. A report prepared by the Public Service Electric and Gas Company of

Part of the equipment that uses high-energy electrons to kill microorganisms in waste water. The electrons are directed down the fan-shaped into the waste water moving slowly underneath. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology developed the high-energy electron treatment test.

New Jersey, with support from the utility-financed Electric Power Research Institute and the United States Energy Research and Development Administration, forecast that in the year 2000, up to 5 percent of the nation's total electricity needs could come from storage systems, including batteries. The batteries, if a multitechnology development program succeeds, would handle the peak demands that build up during a few hours each day, while other storage systems, such as schemes for compressing large amounts would take care of longer-term needs. The batteries of the type developed would be used for test procedures would use spare, large, inexpensive coal at plants at night to build extra hours, such as turbines burning scarce oil, just to meet daytime demands as air conditioning would take care of longer-term needs.

Exxon's 'Dutch Auction' Bond Test

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

The Exxon Corporation, which pays more than $500 million annually in interest on its substantial borrowings, is testing a new money-raising technique popular in the Treasury Department, the country's biggest borrower. In what it describes as an "experiment," the giant oil company has announced plans for a "Dutch auction" in a $54.9 million issue of pollution-control revenue bonds.

Issuing the 30-year, tax-exempt bonds will be the Gulf Coast Waste Disposal Authority of Texas. The principal and interest requirements will be met by Exxon's payments to the authority. Proceeds of this unusual sale will be used to provide air and water-pollution control facilities at the company's refinery and chemical plant at Baytown, Tex., and its chemical plant in Houston.

In the Dutch auction, all bonds are awarded at a uniform price, at the highest yield accepted once the full amount is spoken for. From 1972 to 1974, the Treasury Department raised an estimated $10 billion in selling long-term bonds through this technique. Since that time, the Treasury's debt sales—as in the case of the November refunding that takes place this week—have reverted to the more standard type of auction, whereby successful bidders pay various prices for a Government issue.

The Dutch auction for Exxon's pollution-control bonds, with bids to be received in minimum amounts of $100,000 until Nov. 16, is being watched with more than passing interest. It marks the first time that a major corporation has been associated with an auction of this type and the technique itself bypasses the traditional underwriting route. Usually, underwriters buy bonds from the issuing company and then resell them publicly after obtaining a fee from the company.

The big question posed by this tax-exempt issue—and only time will bring the answer—is whether the Dutch auction method can be applied to financing straight corporate debt. If this proves to be the case, it could mean fewer underwriting dollars for the big Wall Street syndicates and a potential threat to brokerage house profits, already undercut severely by competitive rates in stock transactions at the institutional level.

"It's an interesting development," one underwriting official said. "Maybe I should be more worried." The man at Exxon chiefly responsible for the experiment is Jack F. Bennett, a senior vice president and director, who served earlier in this decade at the Treasury Department as Deputy Under Secretary for Monetary Affairs and later as Under Secretary. In this post, he had a direct hand in managing the fix to the Federal deficit.

"Our success at the Treasury department has led Exxon to method," he noted. "At Exxon guard this technique as one that could leave the door future larger corporate issue."

In the financing of a rate debt, Exxon's borrowing $400 million or more for issues. And for 30 years in the firm of Morgan Stanley received a $100,000 fee for the forthcoming issue) has chief underwriter.

On Wall Street, there doubt among underwriters Dutch auction technique, all likelihood a successful a the tax-exempt area, could well for a corporate bond corporate underwriting, union-control issue, comes types of syndicate restrictions call protection and similar for the bonds—impose Securities and Exchange Commission, moreover, can experiment with the Dutch a rather limited basis since rated, with Exxon-associated sought by many investors.

While individual investor free to bid—at the $100,000—it is expected that big firms, along with banks, casualty companies and loan institutions, will be a chief bidders. If the broker-dealers are in taking down part of the lion issue, they then may r bonds to their clients or to in units as small as $5,000 "There should be a fair retail business with this issue underwriting official summed

What Now?

What will happen to the market and the economy—now that the election is over?

Will they follow past patterns of post-election behavior?

Or will they "break the mold"—and do something different? What surprises could be in store?

Merrill Lynch has just prepared a comprehensive Post-Election Report which we believe every serious investor will find interesting—and useful.

The Report was prepared by an "all-star" team including our chief investment strategist, top economist and senior market analyst.

It revealingly surveys the economy's and market's important reactions to past presidential elections.

It then addresses itself to today's situation, exploring such questions as:

- What is the overall outlook?
• How strongly could the market react?
• What will the government's priorities now be?
• What is the outlook for production and the G.N.P.?
• What's ahead for corporate profits and employment?
• How about changes in tax policy?
• What about the rate of inflation? Interest rates?
• Which industries are apt to benefit most strongly?

 circumstance they say should have been counteracted by more stimulative Government policies.
 "The exact effects of an oil-price increase depend on what policy responses it elicits," said Richard M. Young, director of the quarterly model at Wharton Econometrics Forecasting Associates. "If the response is the same as before, it means a reduction in real growth." Mr. Young said the loss would range up to a full percentage point of G.N.P.
 On the other hand, the effects could be controlled, according to Mr. Cooper of Yale, if the United States, together with West Germany and Japan, increase Government spending by a total of $1 billion in the case of a 10 percent increase to compensate for the new income that OPEC nations would not be pumping back into the world economy.

would persist into 1978, when another OPEC increase would probably again become a possibility. Even without a second increase, Data Resources projects that a 25 percent increase would cost G.N.P. a further three-tenths of 1 percent in 1978 and would cut spending by an additional one-half of 1 percent.

An Uneven Impact
 Moreover, no matter what the size of the increase, economists agree that its impact would be uneven, affecting most severely the same energy-dependent industries that suffered the last time around—automobiles, airlines, and the like.
 Nor is the impact on various countries likely to be even, with many underdeveloped countries, but not necessarily the poorest, appearing the most vulnerable. This group—Mr. Cooper cites particularly nations such as Peru, Brazil, Spain and Finland—is still battling with the debts and deficits brought on by the 1973-74 increases and some may be unable to sustain even a small additional income. Ironically, according to Mr. Cooper, even this effect could come back to haunt the United States. Developing nations might be forced to cut down on their industrial imports to pay their oil bills.

 but indicated the speed of its recovery may have slipped.
 Although difficulties with the Tristar are at the root of its troubles, earnings on products other than the airliner declined during the third quarter—to $60 million from $64 million a year earlier. For the nine-month period, however, the company said its non-Tristar earnings had increased—to $185 million from $175 million.
 Its backlog for future orders was also somewhat smaller on Sept. 26 than a year earlier—$4.07 billion, compared with $4.75 billion. However, the company said its order backlog was actually higher this year if "contracts negotiated but not yet funded" are included—$6.02 billion this year, compared with $5.69 billion a year earlier. All of the backlog totals include $961 million in options for future orders of Tristars, which may or may not be exercised.
 Losses recorded for the Tristar project were $28.1 million for the third quarter, and $74.5 million for the nine-month period, compared with $20.1 million and $51.7 million, respectively, during the like periods last year.
 As of Sept. 26, the company said its long-term debt totaled $754 million. It said bank filings of $540 million were down from $595 million the previous year. It also said shareholders' equity was $106.6 million p from $67.4 million a year earlier. And, it added that the financial restructuring completed in October, in which its banks exchanged $50 million in debt for preferred stock, had raised the equity to $159.3 million.

International Paper Raises Price
 The International Paper Company announced yesterday a price increase of $10 a ton to $244 on its 42-pound Eka-White grade of linerboard, effective Dec. 1. This is a rise of about 4 percent and represents the first increase since Dec. 1, 1974. The price of the company's regular 42-pound unbleached linerboard of $125 a ton, in effect since December 1974, remains unchanged.

n Plans to Make Compulsory Recycling of Waste Material

Special to The New York Times

Nov. 2—Japan plans to make recycling of waste compulsory by legislation for all mining and manufacturing industries as well as municipalities.

The Ministry of International Trade and Commerce is drafting a bill designed to force the country's newborn recycling industry to make effective utilization of household garbage.

The legislation would require that a certain percentage of waste be recycled, and that the recycling be done in a way that does not cause environmental damage.

The bill also provides that the government will subsidize the recycling industry, and that the recycling be done in a way that does not cause environmental damage.

The bill is expected to be passed in the next few months.

Ogilvy Is Near Deal for Scali, McCabe

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY
Ogilvy & Mather International, the sixth-largest United States advertising agency worldwide, is on the verge of acquiring Scali, McCabe, Sloves, one of the truly hot shops in the business. Top managements of both agencies, headed by John Elliott Jr., chairman of O. & M., and Marvin Sloves, president of Scali, announced yesterday that they had reached a verbal agreement for Ogilvy to acquire the smaller shop (some $60 million in billings) for a minimum of $10 million cash. S.M.S. will have complete autonomy and will continue to operate under its own name and with its own management. Its only contact with its parent company will be through a small financial committee made up of O. & M. International board members. Neither agency will be represented on the other's board.

Marvin Sloves John Elliott Jr.

The reason for this almost complete separation is the large number of conflicting accounts represented in the two agencies' client rosters, a situation that has prevented many agency acquisitions and mergers in the past. According to Mr. Elliott and Mr. Sloves they are moving ahead toward a completion of the deal with the blessings of those clients who might be considered conflicting. Ogilvy has Mercedes-Benz, Maxwell House Coffee and the Bowers Savings Bank. Scali has Volvo, Savarin Coffee and the Manhattan Savings Bank. "We've been telling the financial community for years that we don't want to diversify outside of our business and we've been telling them that advertising agencies are a good investment," said Mr. Elliott. "Now we're putting our money where our mouth is—this is purely an investment."

levels of parking at the rear. In the end there will be 3,000 parking spaces for a total of 618,861 square feet of shopping space in the mall. Of the total, 1,800 spaces are new.

THREAT TO POLLUTE WATER IS REPORTED: In Philadelphia, firemen checked water conduits after a man threatened, in a telephone call, to pour heating oil into the water system unless the city paid him $1 million. Water supply points were immediately inspected and guarded by police. No oil was found and city officials said the threat was apparently a hoax.

Blackmun, in Unusual Action, Denounces 5-to-4 Ruling

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Nov. 2—In an unusual statement from the bench, Supreme Court Justice Harry A. Blackmun angrily denounced today a decision in favor of the Government that was issued by five of his fellow Justices this morning in a complicated tax case.
Justice Blackmun also complained of the Government's ability to get the Supreme Court to review issues and contentions that the Government has repeatedly lost in the lower courts.
"The Court ignores and, I think, rides roughshod over an unbroken line of decisions elsewhere," Justice Blackmun said.
The issue in the case was "very complicated," he said. So, he said, the Court should have given "deference" to the Tax Court's earlier, contrary analysis of the issue. "If ever there is a place" for deference, he added, today's case was it.
"The result to me is a distressing one," he said. "I think it is totally wrong."
Rule on Deducting Losses
The case—U.S. v. Foster Lumber Co., No. 74-789—involves the section of the Internal Revenue Code that permits a corporation that experienced a net operating loss in one particular year to "carry back" the loss and use it as a deduction for the preceding three years and the succeeding five years. In other words, it can be used as a deduction to offset taxable income on those years.
The question in the case was whether "taxable income" in this situation includes capital gains as well as ordinary income—or as the Court's decision put it, "whether a loss carryover is 'absorbed' by capital gain as well as ordinary income or is instead limited to offsetting only ordinary income."
The Court, in a decision by Justice Potter Stewart, found that capital gains must also be included.
It was a highly technical matter, and, under normal circumstances, not a matter of much general interest.
Justice Stewart briefly summarized the holding and remarked, smiling, that the issues in the case "do not lend themselves to intelligible oral discussion."
Usually, the author of the majority opinion is the only one to give a summary. Authors of dissenting opinions are customarily listed by the author of the majority opinion, but, generally, do not give summaries. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger has for some time made it clear that he thinks that even the majority authors should not spend much time on their summaries; he believes they take up Court time unnecessarily.

Blackmun Follows Stewart
When Justice Stewart finished speaking today, however, Justice Blackmun announced, in a strong voice, "I have filed a dissent." Chief Justice Burger, he added, and Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Lewis F. Powell Jr. had joined it.
Justice Blackmun then described, in some detail, his objections. He stressed the "narrow margin" of the Court's ruling. He noted that numerous lower courts had ruled the opposite way on the issue. He said of one particular statement in the majority opinion, in which the majority called the law unambiguous, "I emphatically disagree."
The Justice contended as well that "this is another case" where the Government, by its "power," loses its argument in one appeals court, and then in the appeals court of another circuit, and keeps litigating until it "finally" wins in yet another circuit, with the result that it can then get Supreme Court review of the issue.
The Justice was apparently referring to the fact that the high court is much more likely to agree to review a lower court ruling when it involves an issue that various Federal appeals courts have decided differently than one in which there is no conflict between the lower courts.

In today's case, the Government had lost in the lower court—the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit—and the corporate taxpayer, a lumber company, had won. However, the Government had won a case on the same issue in the Fourth Circuit; thus, in its petition to the Supreme Court for review of today's case, it said that the Court should take the case to resolve the conflict between the circuits.
Nongovernment lawyers often contend that the Government has great sway before the Supreme Court—at least compared with them. It is rare, however, for a judge to make the point.
Disputes between Justices on legal issues are not unusual, and, in earlier days at the Court, when opinions were described orally at much greater length than they are now, Justices sometimes criticized one another in open court. But currently, with the limited oral descriptions, disputes between Justices are usually confined to the written opinions.
Justice Blackmun's written dissent today, however, was not as critical as his oral opinion. Presumably, this was because in his written dissent he spoke for three other Justices as well.
FORD ACCUSED OF TRYING TO BALK A HOUSE INQUIRY
WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 (UPI)—An attorney for a House subcommittee accused President Ford today of trying to prevent Congress from investigating possible abuses by refusing to release national security wiretap reports to the panel.
The attorney, E. Barrett Prettyman Jr., told the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, that this was the ultimate effect of Mr. Ford's argument that he alone could determine that giving the reports to the subcommittee would involve "an unacceptable risk of public disclosure."
The President's assertion of executive privilege would "defeat the right of Con-

COURT IS DEADLOCKED ON RELIGIOUS ISSUE

Justice Stevens, saying that the case was not moot and that, since the question was "extremely important," the Court should decide it now.
In the religion case, the appeals court, in ruling that the rubber products company in Kentucky had violated the Civil Rights Act, also ruled that the act's prohibition against religious discrimination did not violate the First Amendment ban against governmental acts that "establish" religion.
Technically, a 4-to-4 split by the Supreme Court means that the lower court judgment is "affirmed," and the Court's announcement in today's case thus stated that "the judgment is affirmed by an equally divided Court."
"However, this type of affirmation—unlike a "summary affirmation" of a lower court ruling in response to an appeal, for instance—does not amount to the Court's adopting of the lower court judgment as its own.
A Change of Religion
In the religion case (No. 75-478, Parker Seal Co. v. Cummins) the employee, Paul Cummins, had gone to work at the company's factory in Berea as a "production scheduler" in 1958 and had been made a supervisor in 1965. The factory worked about half the Saturdays of the year.
Mr. Cummins worked Saturdays for some time. But in 1970 he became a member of the World Wide Church of God, which requires members to refrain from working from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday. He subsequently told the plant manager that he would not be able to work Saturdays but would be available at any other time. The manager arranged for others to fill in for Mr. Cummins on Saturday.
In 1971, however, a subsequent plant manager, after complaints from two other employees, discharged Mr. Cummins because of the refusal to work Saturday.
Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and Equal Opportunity Commission guidelines prohibit the discharge of an employee because of a religious observance or practice, unless the employer is unable reasonably to accommodate the employee's religious needs without "undue hardship" to the employers' business.
In the parole release case (Scott v. Kentucky Parole Bd., No. 74-6438) the issue of mootness centered on the fact that of the two men who initiated the lawsuit one has since died and one, Ewell Scott, has since been released on parole, albeit subject to some restraints.
The three dissenters—William J. Brennan Jr. and Lewis F. Powell Jr. as well as Justice Stevens—contended that the case was not moot because Mr. Scott was still subject to those restraints.

Flight Cancellation Extended
LOS ANGELES, Nov. 2 (UPI)—Continental Airlines, grounded since its pilots went on strike Oct. 23, extended its flight cancellation today from next Friday through Nov. 12. Robert Six, Continental's chairman and chief executive officer, also said the airline would go ahead with plans to furlough at least 2,500 more employees on Friday because no negotiations with the striking pilots were scheduled.

High-School Dropout Rate Up; Poverty and Failure Blame

Ernest Suarez walks past Benjamin Franklin High School in Manhattan with his sister Maria and her three-year-old son. She is one of four children in the Suarez family to have dropped out of school. Only Ernest attends.

By DAVID VIDAL

Elvin was the first one to drop out in the Suarez family of East Harlem. He was in the 10th grade and life was hard; besides his mother, there were four brothers and sisters, and feeling a responsibility as the "man in the house" he quit Benjamin Franklin High School in East Harlem, and went to work as a salesclerk.

"Then it was like follow the leader," said his sister Maria, who is one year younger and is now 20. Four years ago she became pregnant when she was in 10th grade, and dropped out too. Then came his sister Edna, who became bored with school and left to find work, but is now unemployed.

And last June, Eddy, who is 17 and wanted a job, had been left back twice in school, and was tired of not learning anything, simply stopped going to school. He worked three weeks as a metal polisher and was laid off.

The last child, Ernest, is in 10th grade and plans to stay.

To have so many dropouts in one family may be unusual. But the experiences of the Suarez family illustrate what is happening with hundreds of pupils in the New York City high schools. Because of the pressures of poverty, and impatience with the failures accumulated during years in the 1.1 million-pupil school system, the high-school dropout problem is worsening. It is so bad that the State Board of Regents has called the problem "intolerable."

Data vary greatly on the dropout rate but all show a rise and, by one count, a majority of the pupils entering city high schools now become dropouts instead of graduates.

High Level of Absences

Truancy and absences, frequent preludes to dropping out, are also at high levels. Moreover, temporary suspensions for disciplinary reasons, which often only buttress the habit of absence that is tied to dropping out, have risen in the high schools.

At the school where the youngest Suarez may become the first of the children finally to earn a diploma, there are two signs on a wall in Room 152B.

One says: "Drop out now, pay later. The cost is only low wages and unemployment. To get a good job, get a good education." Others say: "The odds are 2 to 1 against a dropout. Twice as many dropouts are out of work as high-school graduates. If you're in school, stay there."

In Room 152B, Phillip Drago, a French teacher and senior counselor at the school for 20 years, said: "They don't come to us, they just stop coming to school. If you want my explanation for why they drop out it's poverty. That's it."

Today two-thirds of the public-school pupils in New York City are black or Spanish-speaking, where two-thirds were white in 1960. The poverty that stalks the black and Hispanic pupils is manifest; more than half the pupils are from low-income families. In many school districts more than one-third of the pupils are from welfare-dependent families.

One Who 'Hopes' to Quit

Ricardo Berrios, who is 16 years old and in the ninth grade at Benjamin Franklin, says he is almost sure he is "falling everything," and he "hopes" he will be able to drop out next year "to hook up with the National Guard." He said: "Classes are packed, and I end up sitting in the back on the floor. With classes like that you don't learn. I just plan on leaving."

At Benjamin Franklin the pupil population is about half black and half Spanish-speaking. Because of the language problems that persist in many Hispanic families living in Harlem, East Harlem and the Southeast Bronx—the region served by the school—pupils from these families frequently do translating chores for their parents at government or business offices.

"You'd be surprised how many of them have to go around escorting their parents and have to miss school," said Mr. Drago. "I had a student last year who was the oldest of eight children. She was only 14 but had to take care of the other children and she got used to not coming to school because of that and because she might have to go to court, to the bank, to the phone company or something, to translate."

To the principal, Melvin Taylor, another cause of the dropout problem is the "age promotion factor."

"If you are 16 you must be in the ninth grade and if you are 17 you must be in the 10th," he said, calling these "social promotions."

"Suddenly, in high school, the whole thing stops because here it is actually an achievement promotion. And youths reading on the second-grade level cannot even begin to cope with high school history or math, they absent themselves and drop out."

Requirements for Graduation

To graduate, a pupil must earn 38 credits and meet several other requirements. Many of the black and Puerto Rican pupils in the system today arrive ill-prepared at the high schools, and this concerns the principal, who is himself black.

Rather than saying there is something wrong with the system, Mr. Taylor said, "teachers and counselors are saying with impunity that blacks and Hispanics cannot perform at certain levels, and it sort of perpetuates the myth."

Some pupils who drop out return later. Elvin Suarez returned because of the bad influence it had on his younger brothers, and held a job part-time. One night after work, he was caught in a gang attack on East 125th Street, was shot in the neck, and became paralyzed from the neck down. Then he had to leave school for good.

Maria Suarez tried twice to get an equivalency diploma, and twice gave up because of personal problems. Although the school is within walking distance of her home, for many pupils today new transportation costs stemming from a change in Board of Education policy are discouraging.

"Many students are saying that they literally cannot afford to come to school," Mr. Taylor said.

Parents do care, but the chores of day-to-day living keep many of the poorer ones so busy that they lose control of their children, he said.

Maria Suarez recalls how her mother "used to throw our books out the door to make us go to school," kept on telling us there was "without a diploma," but just to stay away from school.

The entrance to Benjamin Franklin High School looks onto a street called Pleasant Avenue, a street that runs along the corner of East 125th Street. The street name indicates that even in the poorer area of East Harlem, better days.

In the rear of the school is a green lawn that looks toward Franklin Delano Roosevelt in East River.

The problems that the school faces (almost half the pupils are black, and of 2,600 on the 500-acre school campus) are in the "vicious cycle" producing a stigma on schools, said.

"People view them as about them, and instead of cross-section of students waiting the ones with the most said. To Eddy Suarez, this sequence because he says a regret having quit school, now counted in the 35-to-40 employment rate that afflicts Hispanic youngsters in the area.

"There is no money in a job," Eddy said.

But Maria Suarez thinks: "There is no way you can get a diploma, no way." I regret it, oh, do I regret it!

Condor Dies of Gunshot

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 2 (AP)—A condor, one of only two California condors in captivity, has died of the gunshot wound, the Los Angeles Times reported today. rescind the ban by the SUNY university's student assembly. A formal request was made in June 1975, according to Mrs. Martha Downey, secretary of the board.

Frank Jackalone, president of the State University student assembly, which represents 350,000 students, said many students at campuses that had local fraternities and sororities wanted the ban lifted and those students at campuses that didn't "had no objections."

"We looked into it quite carefully," said Elizabeth Moore, chairman of the board. "In recent years the national organizations have come around to our stand on no discrimination."

Gerald Manginelli, a representative to the Stony Brook student assembly, said he thought "a decision like this is long overdue—the problem of discrimination was rectified six or seven years ago."

The Theta Kappa Beta activities coordinator at the Plattsburgh campus, Frank Schumaci, bemoaned the decline in importance of the sororities and fraternities during the ban, but Tom Crosby, student association president there, said the ban had been a good thing for the state university, because the national organizations had "encouraged cliques and social levels."

In rescinding the ban, the board of trustees has at the same time adopted a much broader policy affecting all student organizations that may wish to have national affiliations.

An affidavit must now be filed with the campus president indicating that the national organization does not discriminate because of race, creed, sex, age, national origin or disability.

This could mean, according to Martha Downey, secretary of the board, that fraternities and sororities must also end any exclusivity of all-male or all-female organizations.

Welfare Roster in Nation At 18-Month Low in June; Smaller Families Are Cited

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 (AP)—The Federal Government said today that the nation's welfare rolls dipped last June to the lowest level in 18 months, partly because of the shrinking size of the American family.

The announcement by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said there were 11,247,678 persons receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children in June, the latest month for which figures are available.

That was the lowest since January 1975, when there were 11,175,000 recipients under the program. The number of families under the program increased during the 18 months from 3,379,559 in January 1975 to 3,554,311 last June.

Robert Fulton, administrator of H.E.W.'s Social and Rehabilitation Service, said that welfare rolls had been declining because of smaller families, a stronger economy, the drive to weed out ineligible recipients and the year-old campaign to collect support payments from absent parents.

The department said that the size of the average family in the program had decreased from 4.1 persons to 3.2 persons during the last decade.

The June rolls were 62,244 recipients below the previous month. Cash payments during the month totaled $818.8 million, more than a $2 million decline from May.

H.E.W. said that while the number of recipients last June was half of 1 per cent below the total a year earlier, the number of welfare families had increased 2.2 per cent.

Georgia led the 28 states registering a 12-month decline in the rolls, down 88,575. Other states or jurisdictions with large decreases were Texas, 48,383; Illinois, 21,224; Puerto Rico, 19,009; Maine, 18,345; and Florida, 15,225.

The largest increase was in California. Other states with higher rolls included Kentucky, Michigan, New York, Ohio and Wisconsin. Eighty per cent of the increase in those six states occurred in families headed by unemployed fathers, H.E.W. said.

Nonfederal welfare rolls called general assistance also hit an 18-month low of 916,866 persons in June.

Bishop Expounds on Prolife Theme

CHICAGO, Nov. 2 (AP)—Restoration of the death penalty is "gravely counterproductive" to the prolife crusade of the Roman Catholic Church, according to Bishop Bernard J. Flanagan of Worcester, Mass. Writing in the U.S. Catholic, published by the Claretian Fathers, he stated that the Gospel message teaches that "no human life, no matter how wretched or how miserable, no matter how sinful or lacking in love, is without worth."

Happy Birthday Good Morning America

One year ago today, ABC premiered an early morning news and information service, "Good Morning America", with the promise of a warm and human approach to the news and events of our time.

We think the promise has been kept.

People trust and like our "people" approach:

- "David Hartman is friendly, caring—he's like a neighbor, I trust him."
- "He's intelligent, knowledgeable—concerned."
- "David and the gang seem like family—our family."

While the program has regular features at regular times, it allows for excitement and spontaneity:

"Our family loves the variety of guests and dependable unpredictability of the show."

And as people discover "Good Morning America" the audience growth has been steady and impressive. Comparing October 1976 to October 1975, the ABC early morning audience has increased 89%. And for the first three quarters of this year, ABC has 69% more early morning audience than the same period last year.

Join the family. Grow with us. Watch "Good Morning America."
